The whole purpose of the first illustrations in Life magazine was to encourage home-ownership, to assist in the selection of plans for a modern home, built at this time when it was most advantageous because of the price of building material. The home, designed to suit an Atlanta family, in which there was a small boy and a small girl, was duplicated by the Atlanta sponsors.

In addition to the home itself, its furnishings are an important factor in establishing a home. For that reason Davison-Paxson Company has provided just the right decorations and furnishings. These have been placed to create a most desirable finishing touch to a home of this type and character. To give a better idea of the type of furnishings and decorations, here they are briefly described: The Living Room.

The charming living room is livable to its fingertips. Soft gray and yellow wallpaper and rich brown carpeting are the back-ground for the handsome Duncan Phyfe sofa, Governor Winthrop secretary, Sheraton spot chairs and the deep pillow-back lounge chair upholstered in a mustard color upholstered in a mustard color fabric of homespun texture. Over the mantel hangs a lovely reproduction of "The Lady With the Harp," forming the focal point for the interesting conversational grouping. Soft marquisette Pris-cilla curtains add a charming note of informality and friendliness.

The Dining Room.

Walls of pale yellow with silver fern design and soft woodrose broadloom carpeting are chosen to bring out the rich deep tones of this lovely mahogany finish dinette grouping, consisting of a handsome extension table and beautifully designed chairs. Attractive fruit prints flank the decorative hanging wall rack. The dining room chairs with upholstered seats of rich blue.

SEEKING METHOD TO REGAIN MARKET

High Government Loans and 40 Per Cent Loss in Foreign Demand Perplex Committee.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7 .- (A)-A committee of 21 southern and western cotton growers discussed a solution today for the problem of declining cotton markets.

The committee, headed by C. G.
Henry, Memphis, Tenn., of the American Cotton Co-operative Association, was selected by 70 growers and state farm officials summoned here by the Agriculture Department.

Committee members said it was possible they would present formal recommendations to Sec-retary of Agriculture Wallace

The problem with which the committee grappled was described

Existence of a record surplus of more than 13,500,000 bales, of which about 10,800,000 bales is stored under government loans involving a federal investment of more than $450,000,000; a 40 per cent slump in foreign sales un-der those of the last season; and prices about 40 per cent short of the goal set up in the New Deal's

The committee considered a suggestion that the loan cotton be returned to borrowing farmers over a period of five years at greatly reduced prices in return for keeping cotton planting opera-tions within 27,000,000 acres annually for that period, compared with a normal acreage of about

It also studied a proposal that, in order to prevent further accumulation of cotton under government control, loans be eliminated in the future. This plan would provide for benefit payments probably twice as large as those now available to growers. A third plan would provide for loans at greatly reduced rates with substantial increases in benefit payments. The belief was expressed at the grower conferences that the presloan program, while providing rates at the minimum allowed by the crop control law, had pegged prices of American cotton above world prices and had thereby retarded exports.

ATLANTA, GA., SUNDAY MORNING, JANUARY 8, 1939.

MEETING IS CALLED BY CITIZENS' GROUP REED REPORT

Definite Plan of Action Will Be Mapped To Secure Reform of City, County Governments.

A definite plan for reorganization of the Atlanta and Fulton county governments will be presented Thursday by the Citizens' Survey committee, it was announced yesterday coincident with a declaration by Atlanta's citizens' financial advisory committee that Fulton county should assume the burden of relief.

At the same time, attention was called to the fact that the Reed report has lost every semblance of standing in city council because a special committee appointed to etudy the survey findings failed to make a report before the end of the year. The resolution authorizing appointment of the group specified that a report should be made to council at the last meeting of 1938.

100 Organizations.

Representatives of more than 100 civic organizations have been called into session at 2 o'clock Thursday afternoon at the Chamber of Commerce building by J. P. Allen, chairman of the cit survey committee, to hear the plan

Although Allen did not reveal details of the program, it will be discussed at the meeting and pushed if it is agreeable, it was

The plan will map procedure to be followed in carrying out the recommendations of Dr. Thomas H. Reed, municipal expert, who surveyed the city and county gov-ernments in 1937.

1937 Law Cited.

It was Dr. Reed who recommended that the county, not the city, bear the expense of direct relief to unemployables, and a law was enacted in 1937 for the purpose of placing this responsibility on the county, W. Eugene Har-rington, businessman who was chairman of the city's financial advisory committee, asserted yester-

Harrington, upon the request of Mayor Hartsfield in December, conferred with the advisory com-mittee composed of representative citizens who advocated the financial reform by which the city got itself on a cash basis, and wrote Hartsfield yesterday that it was the unanimous intention of the committee to oppose continuance of the one-mill city levy for relief made in 1937 and 1938.

This committee asserted adequate care must be taken of the unemployable persons, but that the responsibility is that of the county, not the city.

Emergency Measure.

'The city's one mill tax designed for relief purposes was purely an emergency measure and defi-nite promise was given to those whose support was secured that upon its expiration, December 31, 1938, any attempt to continue it would be opposed," Harrington stated.

"The imposition of a special tax by the city results in the city taxby the city results in the city taxpayer paying not only 100 per cent of the city contribution, but in addition approximately 80 per cent of the amount contributed by the county," he said.
Allen pointed out that numerous committees have studied the Reed report and have arrived at a definite plan of procedure.
Civic organization representanite plan of procedure.

Civic organization representatives will discuss this Thursday to "definitely chart our course for the future in bringing to pass the desirable and much needed changes in our local governments to enable them to operate with greater efficiency, economy and service to our citizens," said Allen.

Public Interest.

He added the most important result of the Reed report thus far has been to stimulate public interest in government.

Coupcilman J. Allen Couch called attention to the fact the Reed report has no standing in council report has no standing in council

"The special committee appointed to study it, headed by Alderman Ed A. Gilliam, is dead now—with all other 1938 committees," he asserted. "Since the report was referred to it, and it's dead, the report has no standing at all."

MEDICAL SOCIETY SEEKS TO RECORD CLINIC PATIENTS

Dr. Aven Says Bureau at Grady Hospital Would Save Time and Duplication in Treatment.

A central investigating bureau to serve as a clearing house of information concerning all persons seeking clinical treatment is one of the principal objectives of the Fulton County Medical Society for 1939, Dr. Carl C. Aven, retiring president, said yesterday.

Reviewing activities of the society for the past year and pointing out the highlights of the new program, Dr. Aven said establishment of such a bureau, preferably at Grady hospital with a trained personnel in charge, would do much to prevent duplication of effort and would result in the sav-ing of considerable time. Projects Are Varied.

Other projects on which com-mittees are at work include:

Creation of a single board of trustees for all public hospitals.

Better control of venereal disease with the establishment of a special clinic at Grady hospital to enable better follow-up.

Establishment of an entirely new medical center with a new Grady hospital as a nucleus. Continuation of investigations of sources of Atlanta's milk supplies.

Establishment of a new and permanent home for the society.

Highlights of last year's activities included in the annual report of the board of trustees and cited by Dr. Aven were:

Approval of the Blankenship and Reed reports.

Recommendation to the grand jury that care of venereal cases be placed under control of Grady hospital.

NEEDS PROGRESS

Tells Arkansas Democrats Time Is Ripe for Federal Assistance.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 7 .-(P)—Governor Rivers, of Georgia, addressing a Jackson Day dinner here tonight, blamed the south's economic difficulties on lack of an aggressive affirmative and defi-'aggressive, affirmative and defi-

"In my opinion now is the most advantageous time in this generation for successful southern spon-sorship of national legislation and national governmental policies, through the Democratic party. The time is ripe for the south to sponsor legislation and a definite pro-gram for our needs," he declared or a prepared speech.

Opportunity Now.
"For the first time since the War Between the States the sons of the south, all Democrats, are in the saddle in Washington. Such an opportunity may not come again several generations."

The Georgian said greatest needs of the southern states were parity in freight rates, federal aid for education and public health, more rural electrification, federal build-ing of rural post roads, soil conservation and more equitable crop control measures.

In connection with his discussion of freight rates, the Georgia executive paid high tribute to Ar-kansas' Governor Carl E. Bailey who, he said, "knows as much or more about this problem than any man in the United States." Recalling that Bailey visited him in Atlanta recently after confer-ring with President Roosevelt at arm Springs, Rivers said:

"To know first-hand how well

he stands in the esteem of our great President is a source of satisfaction to me, and, I am sure, to you as well. I hope you send him to the United States senate at some opportune time, and I likewise trust to see him in some higher rank in Washington than that." Praises Roosevelt.

Governor Rivers devoted most of his address to praise of President Roosevelt, whom he described as "the man of destiny," and of the Democratic party. Without as "the man of destiny," and of the Democratic party. Without referring specifically to the recent general election, he said efforts were being made to sway the peo-ple away from Roosevelt,

"The Republican party must not and will not be returned to powed to pillage our people," he said. "The people trust the judgment, the leadership and the patriotism of Precident Passacia with the said. of President Roosevelt and the Democratic party. Of course, there are calamity-howlers who predict dire things about the country. Americans have not, and will not, let the attitude of these faltering doubters deter us in our unswerv-ing support of this great man and this great party. We expect to follow through with him to the goal of our ambition to do some-thing about the problems that be-set the well-being of the masses of the people."

L. W. Robert, Master of Ceremonies; Congressman Ramspeck Also There.

By GLADSTONE WILLIAMS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7 .- Georgia was well represented at the $100 per plate Jackson Day dinner here tonight attended by President Roosevelt and a distinguished gathering of Democratic leaders coming from all sections of the country.

The state's two United States senators, Walter F. George and Richard B. Russell Jr., joined with at least two members of the house delegation in heading the list of Georgians present.

Ignoring the President's attempt to purge him from the ranks of the party in the Georgia Democratic primary last summer, Senator George attended the party festival in company with Senator Russell and Arthur Lucas, of Atlanta, well-known businessman and one of the George managers in the campaign. They sat to-gether at a table not a great many chairs removed from the speakers' platform where President Roosevelt, surrounded by Vice President Garner and cabinet officials, held the center of the stage.

The two Georgia house members present were Representatives Robert Ramspeck, of Decatur, and Stephen Pace, of Americus. Lawrence Wood Robert Jr., of Atlanta and Washington, secretary of the Democratic national committee, officiated as master of ceremony, performing his duties in his usual splendid style. Mrs. Robert, known to official Washington as the "Glamorous Evie," entertained a group of friends close by. Among the other Georgians at the dinner were Harliee Branch, former newspaperman, now a member of the Civil Aeronautics Commission, and a number of les-ser officials assigned to government agencies in Washington.

I am passing on the advice of Old Hickory.

But despite the general's optimism, I think this is a good time for the Democratic party to "examine its conscience," to think over most seriously what we have done that we should not have done, what we have left undone that we should have done.

Let us start by being realistic. From 1920 on, the Republican arty fed too well and got fat and azy. It gave the American people a "do-nothing" government for which they suffered through the terrible days. That was one reason why in 1932 they turned to the Democratic party. The other reason was that the Democratic party, during that summer and autumn, had a program of action and sounded sincere.

IDEAL CHARACTER FOR OLD CANDIDATES

In the old days the ideal candidate, whom smart managers al-ways looked for, was, as someone has described a former President, a man with "a protective reputation, an obvious but unalert integrity . . . a complete absence of lan or even of thought."

It might be well for both parties in considering their candidates for President and vice president to apply that formula to the dozens who like Barkis seem, even at this moment, to be very, very willing.

In the old days, for the bulk of the population, the elections were only a seasonal diversion—a circus with an oratorical sideshow with the real job done by quiet economic and social—perhaps I should say back room—pressures behind the scenes.

Today there is emerging a real and forceful belief on the part of S. Camp (right), United States attorney, during a jovial moment last night at the Jackson Day dinner. James L. ATLANTA, FULTON LAWS PREPARED FOR LEGISLATURE

Uniform Elective Terms in City, Civil Service for Both Governments Scheduled for Action.

Legislation of importance to residents of Atlanta and Fulton county is scheduled to face the general assembly, which convenes tomorrow morning.

Among the matters are:

1. Request of city council that terms of all elective officials be made uniform, which means either that the mayor and members of the board of councilmen and the board of education will be given another year in office, or that the board of aldermen, and other four-year officials, will be required to run in 1939, instead of 1940.

4. Proposal that Atlanta's mayor pro tem., be elected from general council, not only from the board of aldermen as at present.

commission for Fulton county. 6. Request to the legislature to authorize annexation of several small plots of land adjacent to the city, including lots between the John A. White park and the city limits and a part of the park

Plans of the citizens' survey committee, sponsoring the governmental changes recommended by Dr. Thomas H. F.D.R. POPULARITY CONTINUES TO RISE OVERELECTION LOW

Voting Behind, Index Climbs Two and One-Half Points as Roosevelt Turns to Defense Issue.

DR. GEORGE GALLUP, merican Institute Opinion. Copyright, 1938.

NEW YORK, Jan. 7 .- For the second month in a row since the November congressional elections President Roosevelt's personal popularity has turned upward in the presidential index of the American Institute of Public

As the fourth Roosevelt congress settles down to a strenuous session on relief, national defense and other problems, the Institute's monthly barometer of public sen-timent shows that 58 per cent of the voters approve President Roosevelt today as compared with 55 1-2 per cent in December—a rise of 2 1-2 points in the month. 25,800,000 Vote.

While President Roosevelt is not as popular as he was on election day, 1936, the survey indicates that he is holding a good-sized majority as he enters the last half of his second term, a period when of his second term, a period when of his second term, a period when many a President has run into po-litical difficulties. Translated into actual votes on the basis of the 1936 election, the President's popularity represents about 25,800,-000 major party votes. On election day he received approximate-ly 27,750,000 to about 16,700,000 ly 27,750,000 to about for Governor Landon.

The Institute index is based on a scientifically selected cross-section of the voting population in all parts of the country, completed just before the opening of congress last week.

The survey results are not a measurement of third-term sentiment, but they are a clue to the amount of influence President Roosevelt will start with in the present session of congress. On his continued popularity, many political observers believe, hangs not only the successful defense of the New Deal legislative program but probably also the fate of the Deal in 1940 and the ability of Mr. Roosevelt to name his suc-cessor as Democratic nominee. HENDAYE, French-Spanish Frontier, Jan. 7.—(UP)—The flank of the Nationalist armies in southwestern Spain was reported to be seriously threatened tonight by a Loyalist attack which sought to divert increasing pressure on the Catalonian front.

An official Loyalist announcement said their troops had captured Fuente Ovejuna, 45 miles northwest of Cordoba, in the rich mining regions of Pennaroya as Generalissimo Franco pressed for a decisive victory in northeastern Spain.

In the latter sector the Nationalists claimed to have broken the enemy front in Catalonia between Balaguer and Lerida after an assault which captured Bellmunt, Mongay and Bellcaire, at a point approximately 10 miles east of Balaguer.

"This fellow was one of the finest natural hitters I ever saw. We were in the pennant race—in fact, finally won it but I gladly sold this great hitter for $200.

"He stayed about three weeks with this other club and they got rid of him. He was still hitting almost .400. The last club gram, that had him put him on the suspended list for the last two weeks of the season—despite the fact he was hitting about opened the prep league, but neith-

Doc Smith, who was traded to Little Rock in a deal which brought Joe Guyon to the Crackers, is now managing the New Bern (N. C.) club.

And his story about the great natural hitter is part and parcel of baseball. It is one of those things which often is inevitable and yet is never understood by the great majority. John Fan, the man with the fifty-cent piece, never quite games will be played on the Hen-of course, it doesn't seem logical, as in the case of the .400 hitter, for a club to dispose of him for a paltry sum and seem There have been managers who seemingly had great records and yet did not have their contracts renewed. It was only a year ago that a manager in the Pacific Coast league, although having his club in first place, was summarily dismissed. The point is that a club is in baseball from a business standoint and naturally does not dispose of a player or manager

Often the general public never learns what the reason was. But you may put this down-the club owner or president has been forced to do something he knows doesn't make sense but is absolutely necessary.

It all goes back to one thing in baseball. No one man is bigger than the game itself. And one man can wreck a win-

"THEY CAN'T MISS."

Doc was very complimentary. He said, "It seems to me days later than the city schools you were writing sports when I played around here in 1922." and Coach Sam Burbage and his een thinking about two other fellows in connection with 1922.

So far as I know, they were still using chalk blackboards in the Florida grammar school then.

Anyway, Doc got on the subject of two young players he had last year who will go to camp with the Crackers this spring. They are Lester Burge, a left fielder, and Alf Anderson, second baseman.

"I don't see how they can miss," Doc pointed out. league with a batting average of .368 in 112 games, and was four practice sessions behind them one of the leading second basemen. He spoke of Anderson's speed and ability to quickly adjust himself to situations. He waxed almost poetic about Burge, who is a six-foot, 200-pounder and hit 26 home runs in 70 games for New Bern.

Burge's batting average was .350. "I hear you are counting on Fritz Oetting playing left, but I am certain that Burge will give him a run for his money," Smith told Earl Mann.

Speaking of Anderson, he set a record for base hits in a hine-inning game last year. Playing against Williamston in a game which New Bern won, 20 to 2, Anderson connected safely mined until after Monday's pracfor seven hits in as many times at bat. Facing three different tice sessions. Both squads were pitchers, he hit a triple, two doubles and four singles

Doc Smith's opinion of another boy who will have another chance with the Crackers this spring was interesting. I refer to Lowell (Bull) Hamons, a righthanded pitcher.

Chick Shiver Is Due To Coach Ends, Reliable Report Says.

Tapping the grapevine on the University of Georgia coaching set-up, The Constitution yesterday learned that the following recommendations likely will be made to the athletic board when it con-venes for the annual meeting Tuesday night at Athens: Line Coach-Ears Whitworth,

C., with Browdy back, is rounding into mid-season form, although the squad is not quite as strong as last year's aggregation. The close guarding and accurate shooting of Pony Minsk is sorely missed, despite the fact that several of last year's reserves are playing a much better brand of basketball.

Nehi, having fallen into a slump following their second victory over Warren, solved their problem by the addition of two newcomers-Ed Wissman and Sam Brown. They supply the needed height to make a formidable quintet.

FIVE BASEBALL PLAYERS.

Wissman, speedball pitcher for Columbus last year, is the fifth member of the squad in professional baseball. Other pro ball players include Carval Hubbard, Elmer Riddle, Woody Combs and

R. G. Jones. The J. P. C. team started the season slowly, and before Steve Browdy, ace center, rejoined the team, lost to Hogansville, 29 to 25, in their first loss on their home court in four wears. The Hogansville team defeated Man-chester by 10 points, and Man-chester holds a victory over Nehi if that gives you any idea of the relative strength of the teams in tonight's feature battle. J. P. Grant Rallies To Defeat Surface; Sabin Trounces Gene Mako

WILL GIVE BITSY CUP POSSESSION

Sabin Takes Three Love Sets in Five-Set Match With Mako.

TAMPA, Fla., Jan. 7—(P)— Bryan M. (Bitsy) Grant, of At-lanta, Ga., and Wayne Sabin, slender Californian from Los Angeles, both members of the United States Davis cup team in 1937, scored impressive victories here today to reach the finals of the fifteenth annual Dixie tennis tour-

Grant repulsed Hal Surface, of Kansas City, in four sets of amazing tennis, 4-6, 6-2, 6-4, 6-4, and Sabin won from Gene Mako, a fellow Californian from Los Angeles, in five sets. The scores were 6-0, 4-6, 1-6, 6-0, 6-0.

The tiny mite of the courts from Atlanta has twice won the Divice and a victory over Sabin to.

Dixie and a victory over Sabin to-morrow will give Grant permanent possession of the three-year trophy which bears the names of most of the leading amateurs of the country during the last 15

SURFACE WINS FIRST. Surface took the first set from Grant with a display of shots which were termed by the Atlantan as the "most amazing he has ever seen." Grant took a lead of 3-0 before Surface broke through Bitsy's service. From then on Grant deuced only two games and broke through Surface's service to score in the seventh game, but the Kan-san blasted Grant off the court in the next three games to take the set.

Surface couldn't hold the pace and dropped the second set, winning only two games.

In the third set Surface flared up again, taking a 4-1 lead. At this point of the match Grant set-tled down to play beautifully. He couldn't miss a shot apparently, and ran out the set at 6-4. GRANT GOES AHEAD.

After the intermission Grant took the lead and won four games. Again Surface His beautiful placements dusted the chalk lines on 15 con-secutive shots and the Kansan evened the match at 4-all.

The pace was too tough for the Kansan and the little retriever from Atlanta rallied and soon had Surface wild. Grant took the next two games for set at 6-4 and the Sabin's victory over Mako provided even more amazing tennis than the preceding battle Sabin took seven straight games at the outset, although his play completely collapsed with Mako taking the second and third sets without extending himself.

SABIN GETS HOT. After the rest period Sabin re-turned to the court to overcome a three-game margin gained by Mako in the fourth set, winning 12 straight games. Sabin's beautiful passing shots,

'Fight Infantile Paralysis Campaign.' (Editor's Note: The following signed story has been written expressly for the "Fight Infantile Paralysis" campaign by Georgia Coleman, former Olympic diving champion, and describes her own

victorious battle against this dread

By GEORGIA COLEMAN. NEW YORK, Jan. 7.—You can lick infantile paralysis. I know hardest battle of my life; took a year of constant effort both on my part and on the parts of my physi-cians and my athletic coaches, a year of fighting fear and hopelessness, a year of gruelling physical rebirth, but it has been worth

When I took my first dive off a three-foot board on August 8, 1938, I was more thrilled than when I dived off a 33-foot platform in Amsterdam on August 10, 1932, and won the Olympic championship. That was because in the interim I had learned the real importance of arms and legs in daily living, apart from the importance of arms and legs in earning my livelihood.

And now, today, when I am able to use my arms and legs not only to walk in the streets, to dance, to do all the little things about my home which were impossible to me during the year I was stricken, but to teach swimming and diving again as a full-fledged professional, I am so happy I could

I have shed many a tear during this year, but cry as much as you want it won't bring back your arms and legs to you. That must be done with knowledge and work. That fact is what the new National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis is attempting to bring to the attention of the nation, and it seems to me one of the most important causes in the entire world. I sincerely hope that people, as American citizens, will fol-low through in this campaign and give the money necessary to bring the message to every one in the land who suffers from infantile paralysis, not only for themselves but for their children.

The job of getting over infantile paralysis depends a lot on the patient himself. It is easy to feel sorry for yourself, to become apathetic toward the small details of the routine which is absolutely essential to eventual recovery. Imagine me, as much at home in the water as on the land, not being able to stay afloat without being held up, and spending hours every An important meeting of the Atlanta Municipal Golf Association cians must require you to do, if

POLIOMEYLITIS Ex-Cordele Outfielder Keeps Fit Playing Bas-ketball: Rated Creek B

By TOM KINNEY.

COVINGTON, Ga., Jan. 7.—Reports from Gainesville indicate that Dean (Noah) Evans, 22-year-old Cracker rockie outfielder, will be fit as a fiddle when he reports for spring training in March.

"If I don't stick with the Crackers this year it won't be any fault of my physical condition," beamed Evans, who is busy these days chopping wood at his Gainesville home. "I play basketball with New Holland," added Dean, "and, brother, don't think it doesn't take plenty of steam. I'm in good shape right now and expect to be rearing to go by March." ROOKIE OUTFIELDER

Evans stands five feet 11 and weighs 170. His batting average last year for Cordele, in the Georgia-Florida league, was around the .325 mark. His fielding average of .989 for the season also because I've done it. It's been the gives him something to boast IN FAST COMPANY.

Rookie Evans will be cast with fast lot in the Cracker training camp. He will be along with Rucker, Anderson, Mailho, Bolling, Brewster and Mauldin. After a slow start with Cordele last year the Gainesville youth found himself on the base in time to steal a total of 25 bases. Evans started his baseball career as a second baseman with the Chicopee Mills club some six years ago. Tommy Paris, former quarterback on the 1928 Georgia University football team, at the time was coaching baseball at Chicopee and switched Evans to mained. At first high flies couldn't be judged. Several games were lost at the expense of Evans' lack of judgment. Coach Paris remained pat on his judgment, though, claiming that the pitchers later would be repaid with outstanding catches by Evans. They were too! And it was but a few games away. Once he learned to judge the ball it was no trouble to get to it; his speed was the pay-off.

Evans played center field with Bob Hasty's Cordele club last year, and the former Cracker pitcher believes that he will stick with the Crackers this year. "Dean can really cover terri-

Glenn Cunningham and Don Lash Gain Easy Victories.

NEW YORK, Jan. 7 .- (AP)-Wesley Wallace, speedy Fordham University junior, set a new world indoor record of 1 minute 4.4 sec-onds tonight as he led all the way to win the Columbus 500-meter

While Glenn Cunningham and Don Lash were scoring expectedly easy handy triumphs in the 800-meter and 3,000-meter cials, respectively, Wallace threw a minor bombshell into the opening meet of the indoor track season. &He sprinted into first place at the starters' gun, opened up a five-yard lead on Mortimer Alnwick, of Georgetown University, and then beat back a fine closing bid by Lou Burns, former I. win by three yards. Wallace's triumph was so de-cisive that it overshadowed the complete failure of Jim Herbert, vorld record-holder and national hampion at 600 meters. Herbert had won this event the last two years, but tonight he never was better than fifth, and was last at the finish.

Cunningham, who flew in from Kansas this morning and flew right back aagin tonight, stopped off long enough to fly around the flat floor in 1:53 for 800 meters. And Lash, now an Indiana state policeman, uncorked a blistering sprint to win the 3,000 in 8:28.

In that final whirl Cunningham breezed past Gene Venzke of the New York A. C., last year's win-ner, to win by three yards. Lash's sprint pulled him past Tommy Deckard, of Bloomington, Ind., his one-time teammate at Indiana University, and brought him in the winner by seven yards. San Ro-mani was another 15 yards back in third place.

Leading Field Trial Dogs of U.S. To Hunt at Waynesboro Jan. 16

SHOULD BE ONE OF FINEST HELD

Second Oldest Field Trial Club in Nation Rich in Tradition.

By JACK TROY.

From dawn to "first dark," for three or four days starting Monweek, leading professional handlers and winning field trial dogs of America will participate in one of the most picturesque and skilled of sports at Waynesboro.

Annual trials of the Georgia Field Trials Association are no pink tea affair. For, from dawn to "first dark," the dogs run, and handlers and spectators follow them on hosses.

It might be well to point out that the Waynesboro club is the second oldest active club in the United States. It is rich in tradition and retains hallowed memories of the great dogs that have run to glory over fields teeming

What dogs they recall Waynesboro, a quiet, dreamy lit-tle town down in Burke county— There were such setters as aesar, Tonapaugh, La Besita, Count Whitestone, Lanark Lad,

Sixteen numbered courses, clearly marked to enable handlers and others follow-ing the trials to keep up with the running of the dogs, have been laid out this year on the Waynesboro testing grounds.

Leading professional handlers and winning fields trial dogs of America are expected to be entered in the annual meet which will be divided into four stakes—the members' all-age, the members' derby, the open all-age and the open derby. Silver trophies will be awarded winners in the two members' events. In the open all-age there is a guaranteed purse of $1,000, divided $500, $300 and $200. In the open derby the purse will be 75 per cent of entry fees, divided per cent, 30 per cent and per cent and usually mounts to $500 or more.

The annual field trial dinner will be held Sunday night. The entries do not close until that night, at which time the drawings will be made. Judges for the trials are Dr. T. W. Shore, of Booneville, N. C., and Horace Lytle, of Dayton, Ohio, both well known and experienced.

Georgia is proud and fortunate in having such a group of field trial men at Waynesboro. I don't bound to be harmful to him—that say that. What I'm trying to say is that I never believed a lot of the stuff that has been said about what football will do for a boy. I simply think it is a good game and AUBURN, Ala., Jan. 7.—Local at the Clark University gymthat a boy who plays it adds one more interesting phase to his college life.

"Naturally, I am in touch with many former players. I see them before and after games and along about this time of the year, when the football season is over and the banquet and smoker season is at its height. I don't know any of them who regrets having played or who has lost any enthusiasm for the game. As in any other group of college graduates, there are those who have done well and those who haven't. But they enjoy seeing each other and talking about the games they played and the games they have seen and I can't see, for the life of me, where football has done any harm to them.

"Football has had its tragedies of course. Players have been kill-ed or have suffered serious injuries that have handicapped them for the rest of their lives. Nobody, no matter how much he likes football, can dismiss those things lightly or forget them-or even want to. Rule makers, directors, coaches—everybody interested in football—constantly are trying in every way, by amending the rules and in the study and care and training of the boys, to eliminate the hazards of the game.

WORTH-WHILE INDUSTRIES

The story of a job being done by the Engineering Experiment Station at the Georgia School of Technology, along the lines of research into the comparative values, to Georgia, of different industries, is told today on the opposite page to this. It is, potentially, the most valuable undertaking for the future economic prosperity of Georgia, of any launched

The work being done is exactly in line with a suggestion made in an editorial which apneared in The Constitution of December 5, 1938. That editorial pointed out the wide difference between the value added to raw materials by the average worker in the four leading industrial states of the north, and the value added by the average worker in the 11 southern states.

Regardless of statutory limitations, it is impossible, by the simplest logic of economics, to pay in wages more than the value created by the workers. Thus, to be economically sound, any industry must discover, before investment is made, the ratio of value it can add to its raw materials and the other factors of cost of operation, of sales and of distribution

At the Georgia Tech station, with government statistics as the source of the primary information, it is being discovered exactly what are those industries which can be most profitably operated in Georgia. This means, by direct corollary, those industries which will be able to pay their workers best and, thereby, prove of greatest value to the localities in which they are established.

Too often, in the past, enthusiastic town or county boosters have sought location of industry within their borders, without regard to the ability of that industry to pay its employes at a rate which will make them desirable and valuable residents and citizens. Sweatshop industry is a handicap, not an asset, to any community. While it is not believed that Georgia has been cursed with many industries which could rightfully be placed in the sweatshop category, it is nevertheless true that there are industries located here which have contributed but little to the economic advancement, either of their own communities or to the state as a whole. It is equally true that there are numerous industries which have not yet been operated in Georgia which could, nevertheless, establish themselves here, both to their own advantage and to the benefit of the state.

It is these advantageous industries whose identity is sought in the work now being conducted by the engineering experiment station at Tech, under the sponsorship of the Industrial

From these investigations should come a more intelligent industrial development of the state. When they are completed there will be available, to every community in Georgia, information that will show, irrefutably, the wisdom, or otherwise, of the establishment of any given industry at that particular location.

Greater selectivity of new industries and avoidance, in so far as possible of those less desirable, economically and socially, was the purpose behind the editorial of December 5. That is the same purpose inspiring the Industrial Development Council and the research work being done by the State Engineering Experiment Station at Georgia Tech.

SMOTHERING THE LIGHT

PRAGUE, Dec. 31.-(P)-One of the world's oldest newspapers, the Czech Prazske Noviny, which boasted an age of 259 years, disappeared tonight in the swell of change hit Czecho-Slovakia after the Munich

A newspaper born almost a hundred years before the American era of independence yields before the pressure of a clock hand turning back into the dark ages of medievalism-the era before the invention of the printing press and the spread of universal knowledge.

Man's surging drive for liberty followed swiftly upon the development of the art of printing, releasing knowledge from the tombs of scholasticism and bringing light into the dark minds of subject peoples. Without it, there would have been no Paine to sound a clarion call to all Americans; no inky messenger to carry forth the lightning words of the Declaration of Independence, and no bearing of the message of this democracy to the lands across the sea, from which was born the ideal of Czecho-Slovakian independence.

Just as printing freed man from eternal bonds, so is the controlled press of totalitarian states forging them anew. The death of the venerable Czech paper is but indicative of the terrible price paid by the democracies at Munich. The fierce light of freedom burned bright in the midst of a sea of autocracy. It has been snuffed out as one would cup the light of a candle. Even the flicker is today gone. Whether the embers will live, and renew the fire, only tomorrow can tell.

NEW WELFARE DIRECTOR

The appointment of Braswell Deen, of Alma, as Georgia state director of public welfare has been received with state-wide approval. There are few citizens of the state in the public eve who enjoy a more unanimous esteem and confidence of the people than does Mr. Deen.

He has gained, during a busy life, experience peculiarly apt for the position he now assumes. As a banker, editor and businessman he has come in contact with people in all walks of life, under all sorts of conditions. He combines a warm and deep humanitarianism with a proper appreciation of economic and business limitations that makes him an ideal choice for the admittedly difficult place as head of Georgia's activities in the new structure of social security and responsibility for dependent citi-

Mr. Deen served in congress for six years, as representative from the eighth Georgia district. During his three terms at Washington he was active in the preparation and enactment of the federal social security and social betterment legislation and is thus thoroughly familiar with the objectives and definitions of his new duties.

Forced to retire from congress for reasons of health, it is especially gratifying to see that he has recovered so completely he is able, once again, to enter the service of the people of the state. Governor Rivers has once more demonstrated his remarkable ability to select the right man for the right place and Georgia as a whole will watch Mr. Deen's administration of the Public Welfare Department with complete confidence.

Radio waves-according to the scientific heroes who dash about following these thingshead upward from a broadcasting station, hit the outer atmosphere and come bouncing back into receiving sets, where they are taken or left strictly alone according to the whim of the man in the easy chair. That bouncing continues, it is said, until the wave glances into a nevernever land and joins the ghosts of the Marsmen and others equally gone but neither forgotten nor regretted.

The same principle holds good for programs. Major Bowes long years ago toted his gong into a small, local New York station and started knocking the amateurs off his merry-go-round. A network took him on, knocked out his gong and introduced sweetness and light into the realm of one-man bands, squeaky sopranos and water-logged basses. That started something, and within the space of a few short weeks the radio waves bounced amateurs around the world until it became seriously doubtful whether the professional entertainers a word used advisedly-could keep up the pace without resort to an amateur status. Today, Major Bowes continues to go round-andround, having ducked the blow of the Frankenstein monster he created; amateurs, however, have for the most part returned to the hearth and a limit has been placed upon the range of the boredom they dispensed willy-nilly not a few years ago.

The latest of the radio "waves" manifests itself in a parade of inquisitive gentlemen intent upon displaying the collective knowledgeor lack of it-of their victims to the public at large. Even the sidewalk airers of opinion have descended to finding out the number of persons on the street who know or do not know the number of letters in the alphabet and how many basic numbers there are in the mathematical processes. One program manages to provide a group of victims well-versed in the peculiarities of Mother Earth and her children. but for the most part the programs are directed at the average, every-day, ordinary victim. The result is an occasional display of remarkable retentive ability and an overwhelming collection of both good and bad guesses and a general indication that a lot of people care not a whit who is the current big shot in Tembellaga. For those newspapermen given to answering telephones during the evening study hours, the programs are heartening—they reveal that a lot of other persons can't answer, off-hand, the silly questions a lot of other persons think up. But it is at best a temporary matter . . . the 'phones still ring.

Meanwhile, the programs go on and on but are, happily, getting to the point where there are few more questions to be popped. Then perhaps one really good program will continue, and the rest of the world can sit back again to the pleasure of finding out for themselves whether John married Anne in the latest serial novel. The question fans can turn then-just as a suggestion-to the West Point entrance examinations in geography and spend the rest of the year in a question and answer heaven.

M. Daladier seems singularly unmoved by the grimaces of the Duce. It is the first setback in months for the Halloween-face school of diplomacy.

ONE WORD MORE

By RALPH McGILL.

THE SHADE OF WASHINGTON The other evening I attended a dinner. At the conclusion of the address of the evening, which had to do with the philosophy of democracy, some of the ladies present said "Let us all bow our heads for a moment in memory of George Washington and our country. I bowed my head but the head kept wondering if the good ladies recalled that when George Washington finished his second term of office he was already the subject of attacks as vicious as those launched against Roosevelt today and against Jefferson and Jack-

The facts are that Washington left office a tired and somewhat cynical man. Many of the newspapers lashed at him; the political leaders of the opposition accused him of seeking to set up a dictatorship and the cumulative effect was to make him exceedingly glad to leave office. The attacks on Thomas Jefferson were even more vicious and bitter. He was building the nation and yet almost every action was misinterpreted. There were plots and rebellions. There were men corrupt in high places. When he left Washington for his home he, too, was weary and all but ill. He left such an affection that his friends and admirers almost literally ate him out of house and home as they came by the dozens to visit him there in Virginia. Andrew Jackson experienced the same reaction from his opposition in the states and in congress. He and his hickory body mind were tested to the limit. When he left there were more eyes for him than for his successor. Abraham Lincoln was hated as much as these other men. Many of his own cabinet plotted against him

Washington help create the republic; Jefferson gave it prestige and added to its territory. Jackson really made it a nation among nations and gave it international respect. He prepared the way for Polk to carry on the fight for Oregon. Lincoln saved the union. All were hated and violently opposed. A BIT OF PATIENCE An admirer once approached England's great Gladstone and said:

Mr. Gladstone, out of your great experience what faculty would you say was most important for a leader to possess?" "Patience," said Gladstone.

"And the second? "Patience.

"A third one, then?"

The people who oppose Mr. Franklin D. Roosevelt with so much emotional and unthinking violence of opinion, might do well to have a little patience. It ought to be remembered that the problems of the nation are tremendous and most important. A gentleman who owns many industries said in Atlanta the other night: "Let's be sure the next deal, no matter whose deal it is, works.

That is important. That is work.' might be well to remember that during the administrations of Jefferson and Jackson there were thousands, and among them many men of ability, who believed those men were wrecking the nation. It came along to a greater growth. Lincoln had a civil war. The nation emerged stronger than before.

All those men had expanding lands for the unemployed. There was new land for them to take and develop. There was a lusty, growing country which consumed all it produced, and more. There ought to be today the orderly processes of democracy.

There ought to be the expected support and attack on the Roose-velt policies. There should be an effort made to make work that legislation and those organizations which we have. There ought, most assuredly, to be less hysteria and fewer to form an estimate now of what the Roosevelt administration has done. It is an estimate impossible to form. Just, in fact, as impossible as were all of those formed by the opposition to Jefferson and Jackson. THE THIRD TERM Advices from Washington all are beginning to have the same tone with regard to the third term. Unless there is some national crisis, either military or economic, Roosevelt will not offer for a third term. If there is, he will offer. If there is and he does offer, he will be nominated and elected. The odds are he could be even without

Those close to the situation say, however, that some of the drama is gone from it for Roosevelt. He, too, is becoming tired and a bit worn with the scene. It has lost some of its impelling attraction.

They say he is stubborn enough, as was Theodore Roosevelt, to wreck the Democratic party if it comes to a fight between that in which he believes and that of the opposition to break down that which he has set up. But they do not believe he will.

Meanwhile, there are peace signs in all the Democratic party. There are indications, the nefarious Republicans, the "party of plunder," will find the "party of the people," solidly united when

The Republicans, hungry for the pie counter, seem to be making old blunders. They never learn. There actually isn't much difference between a so-called "young Republican" and a Democrat. The Old Guard has kicked out the "young Republicans. Unless there is a break at the top all indications are the party of the people will continue at the pie counter when the votes are counted

We'd read how scribes of leisure who'd already made a name Hired up ghost writers to carry or the flame; So we got one of those wizards—from a columnist we tore 'im.

But we had to fire him 'cause he couldn't write a poem!

He was good at short stories and strange detective themes.
Over the globe he'd trotted—had salled the seven streams;
He knew the king's English, nothing Webster could show 'im.
But went up like a bubble when said: "Let's write a poem."

What Stocks Did. 703 757 NEW YORK, Jan. 7 .- (AP) -- The stock market generally ended the first week of 1939 on a declining trend, with pivotal industrials and rails losing fractions to more than 2 points. The brief session started out well, with utilities, rails and spe-cialties attracting buyers. The ticker tape loafed during the greater part of the time, but last-minute selling of steels, motors and other leaders quickened the pace appreciably. Even the favorites gave ground at the finish and only a handful was able to emerge with modest advances.

The Associated Press average of 80 stocks was off .5 of a point at 52.4 and, on the week, showed a net decline of .8 of a point. Transfers today totalled 632,910 shares against 853,190 last Saturday.

With financial minds apparent-ly somewhat confused over the administration's latest spending program, the suggestion of new taxes and opposition of the lawmakers to the fiscal proposals, traders shifted to the selling side.

Utilities were resistant most of the time as the theory was expounded that congress possibly vould balk at appropriations for public-owned power plants to compete with private companies. In addition, earnings in this field Aviations continued favorable. Av pushed up for a while. though recommended expenditures for defense planes were smaller than many expected, it was be-lieved manufacturers could still profit substantially.

CHICAGO, Jan. 7 .- (AP) -- Wheat prices declined in late trading to-day, wiping out early gains of as much as 3-4 cent and closing 1-4 to 1-2 lower compared with yesterday.

The market staged a recovery movement at the opening, strengthened by firm Liverpool cables and failure of expected precipitation to materialize in the domestic winter wheat area. Atlantans Choose Tropical Climes for Winter Vacation

By Sally Forth.

A TLANTANS are beginning to respond to the lure of tropical climes with the arrival of midwinter. Each day brings the departure of society's older and younger members for Florida where, during the next two months, they will relax from the city's winter activities and enjoy the sports and gayeties offered at these fashionable southern Cruising in southern waters is also attracting many Atlantans who will embark upon palatial steamships at an early date for a voyage to South America. According to rumors, the steamer Nieuw Amsterdam will carry many prominent Atlantans when she lifts anchor on February 11 to set sail for a six-week cruise to South America. Mrs. Walter Hill and her daughter, Laura, will be among the ship's passengers, as will be Mrs. Edward Daniel Jr., Mrs. Inman Sanders and Mrs. Walter Colquitt. Other representatives from Georgia sailing on the same liner will be Miss Mary Goodrum, of Newnan, whom Atlanta claims as part-time resident, as she frequently visits relatives here.

A 16-day cruise in the Caribbean sea will be enjoyed by Dr. and Mrs. Edward G. Mackay, who sailed yesterday on the steamer Rotterdam for New Orleans. Jack Spalding is another Atlanta passenger aboard the steamer on which the prominent Atlanta minister and his wife sailed.

Mrs. Henry D. Ittner will spend the forthcoming month in Nassau with Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Wilson, who are ensconced in their attractive home on the Britishruled island.

A family quartet leaving Tuesday for Miami includes Mr, and Mrs. Gus Dodd and their son and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Satterthwaite, who will remain at the popular resort until April. Anne Irby is listed as one of Atlanta's popular belles visiting in Miami. Among feted Atlantans enjoying a fortnight's stay in Miami is Mrs. William J. McKenna, who returns to Atlanta on Monday. During her stay at the beach Mrs. McKenna has been the inspiration for a series of parties which were concluded with a luncheon given Saturday by Mrs. John B. Georgia Girl, at Heidelberg, Has Thrilling Experiences

Miss Nellie Peters Rucker-center-daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lamar Rucker, of Athens, is an exchange student at the University of Heidelberg

The picturesque Rhine river-above-figured prominently in the travels of Nellie and was one of the interesting spots of her foreign sojourn.

By YOLANDE GWIN.

A Georgia girl attending the University of Heidelberg recently visited the party house where Herr Hitler first organized his party and which is, even Nellie Peters Rucker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lamar Rucker, of Athens, has been a student at the Foundation sponsorship. The two Georgia students Tan Bennett Jr., of Pine Mountain, whose father, for last year, but is a former student of the State University. Nellie will receive her doctor's degree in chemistry from Heidelberg this year.

In describing her visit to Hitler's famous party

"We boarded the train in Berlin and occupied our berths until the arrival in Munich next morning. It was my first ride in a German sleeper and I must say it was most comfortable. At five that afternoon we were scheduled at the Braun Hausthe party house where Hitler first organized his party and even today an important location for the National Socialists. We were allowed to pass the barriers and enter the hall. Up one flight of stairs we entered the council room of the party which Hitler himself decorated. The walls were panelled, the chairs were red leather and very comfortable. All were grouped around a table."

"At the back of the room were four chairs for the Fuehrer and those chosen by him, and behind these was an eagle set in brown mosaic, about which were written the most important dates in the history of the party-its founding, the revolution in Munich, Hitler's departure from prison, the first Nationalistic Reichstag, the first Partei day in Nurnberg, etc. The Fuehrer hardly uses this office any more. The room is very simple and it was evident that Frederick the Great is one of his heroes, for three pictures of him were in the room, Before leaving we took a look in the cellar at the casino where the cook is a special connoisseur of vegetables. The Fuehrer is a vegetarian."

The Georgia girl, with her party, according to her letter, made a stop in the Bergstrasse, near Weinheim, where they made an inspection tour through the Erhhofdorf. The visit there was quite interesting to Tap Bennett, according to Nellie, for he compared the place with what his father is doing down at Pine Valley, near Warm Springs. It is much the same thing. The farmers buy the house which the government builds, and pay only a very small sum each year until the 40,000 marks are refunded in 68 years' time.

The main difference, according to Nellie, is that the German farmer cannot say in his will to whom the farm shall be given, but it goes automatically to his oldest son, and the other children inherit what little money he has made if the crops have been good, but no property. In that way the farms are not divided up between several branches of

A sight-seeing trip around Berlin found Nellie inspecting the new airport buildings in Templehof, where she saw the wonderful new runway right up to the station, so that passengers will step out of the plane direct into the waiting room. On top of the runway cover there is a huge restaurant for 700, and there is direct connection with trains for freight and passengers to all points in Europe.

They also visited the Olympic field, and according to Nellie, "the Germans have made a beautiful park out of the surroundings about the stadium, and I doubt if any American athletic field can compare with it, although several Americans did remark that they could not understand why we took time out for such things-the Yale Bowl and Sanford Field, for instance, were just as fine!"

OLD HOME WEEK IN HEIDELBERG.

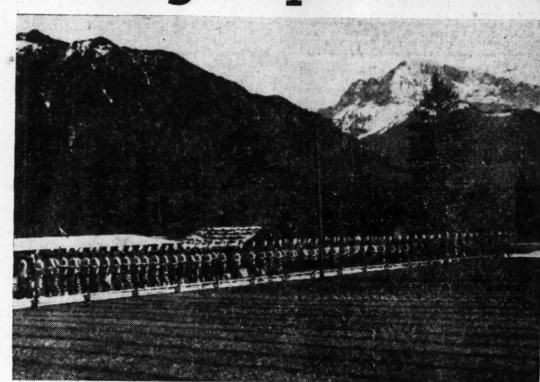

It was a matter of "old home week" when Nellie and her traveling companions visited Heidelberg, where four alumni of the University of Georgia had a reunion. They were Margaret Jones, of Savannah, who spent last year at Heidelberg; Peter Wecker, of Germany, who was the German exchange student at the University of Georgia in '36-'37; Tap Bennett, who studied at Freiberg, and Continuing her letter, Nellie writes:

"In Stuttgart we had our first look into a German factory. The Salamander Shoe Factory invited us to visit their plant, which employs over 7,000 workers. We were taken in groups, and had explained to us the life of a shoe from beginning

My American comrades were very much interested in the wages and hours, and the conditions of the workers. They found them to compare well with the American standards. The difference is, however, that the Germans work without any strike intermission. The factory gives the workers trips into the country to other large towns and takes care of all accommodations and sight-seeing trips for a nominal sum, called betriebsausflug. Their salaries range from 40 to 50 marks a week and the hours are 38 in the week."

"The climax of our trip came when we boarded the Steamer Vaterland under a warm blue sky to start our trip down the Rhine. (During the entire trip special records and broadcasts recorded the visits from town to town and the speeches of welcome given them.) The short-wave station had a microphone down on the banks of the Rhine all ready to broadcast when we arrived, and whom do you suppose they called on to come to the mike? None other than 'yours truly,' Nellie!

"I said a few words, but being as I was so nervous, they sounded bad, and I doubt if the record will be used. But the folks at home might like it. Before completing the broadcast, we sang, 'O Du Wunderschoner Deutsche Rhine.'

"There were places set for us for dinner at the Petersburf. The dinner was a royal one-huge ice meringue for dessert. We began a dance and an American gave us a big surprise before the Big Apple, by singing a song composed in honor of the trip. We southerners got together and proposed dancing the Virginia Reel, but it was not made unanimous. The northerners can never agree with us-but they consented, provided we would first give the Big Apple. We all lined up and an American took over the piano and the drum, and then Tap (Bennett) started the first figure-he really can get the right rhythm). You should have seen him trucking and shining. The Germans were very much amused."

VISITS TO ITALY. Nellie has also enjoyed trips into Italy. Upon one occasion she was one of four students in the botanical institute of the University of Heidelberg making the trip. Plant life was studied and Italian botanical gardens were visited in Sicily. The group climbed Mount Aetna and devoted much time to the study of undersea plant life.

The Georgia girl and her traveling companions on their sightseeing tour rode through the mountains to Mittenwald, and made a brief stop at the Arbeitsdienst, which, according to Nellie, is very much like the American CCC camps. The camps looked spick and span. They crossed the Austrian border and the Georgia girl says that the roads are like our cow-paths in Georgia, so much so that the tourists had to get out and walk down the mountain.

They visited the castles of the mad King Louis, of Bavaria, Neuschwangau and Hohen Schwangau, but lets quote Nellie further: 'Then came a stop at Ulm and then on to Stuttgart and we sang German and American songs so lustily we hardly noticed the 60 kilometers. However the ride was an easy one and one over smooth German roads. Tap and I got the crowd going on negro spirituals and I don't know how it was, but pretty soon I was singing a solo and the Americans liked the negro dialect so well that I had to do two from her, and how well they liked it!" And by the way, Nellie has gained quite a name for herself since she enrolled at the University of Heidelberg. To modern medical history, which boasts the names of doctors and scientists of world renown, will be added the name Rucker, which represents an illustrious Georgia family. The name will indicate a type of recently discovered germ, which will be listed in medical journals as "Type Rucker."

During her studies at the university, Nellie has been untiring in her efforts in chemical research. In recognition of her outstanding accomplishments in research, she began in late 1937 a thesis in bacteriology which will lead to a doctor's degree in

Through her seemingly inexhaustible medical research and her interest in her chosen work, Nellie found an unusual diptheria germ which has been named in her honor. At the time of the discovery, she was assistant to the famous German scientist who heads the medical department at the University of Heidelberg.

Nellie is a representative of distinguished forebears who have been pioneers in the upbuilding of Atlanta. She is the daughter of the former Neta Black, and she bears the name of her beloved grand. mother, the late Mrs. Nellie Peters Black. Her maternal grandfather was Congressman George R. Black, of Sylvania. Her father, Lamar Rucker, was a former member of the Georgia legislature.

The Death of a Legend: The Story of Al Capone

By JOHN LEAR

Associated Press Staff Writer.

NEW YORK, Jan. 7 .- The legend that was Al Capone is about to die.

It is crumbling behind the walls of the island prison of Alcatraz, along with the twisted mind that reared it. A few weeks more, and it will be gone, leaving behind it just another man—plain Alphonse Capone.

Doctors who should know say that the disease which drives Al mad one week in every four will not permit him to live long after he quits the island on January 19. But even if he lives, Al will never again be the Capone of the legend.

The machine gunning gang he led when he was the baddest of the bad men has broken up in his besence, victim of its own dark genius for organized

The prohibition law from which he derived his biggest racket, illicit alcohol, has been repealed. Bootlegging still goes on, but its income is picayune compared to Al's oldtime "take" of $75,000 a month.

The glamor that covered underworld kings in Al's heyday has been transfered since, to the hunters of criminals: The G-men. For it is hard to make idols of frightened creatures shot down like rats in the miserable manner of John Dillinger and "Ma"

The old Chicago Al knew is less flamboyant and less violent. Landmarks of the past, like "Bath-house" Coughlin, have passed on. Gang deaths have declined from 701 in the 12 years of Capone activity declined from 701 in the 12 years of Capone activity to a mere dozen in 1938. And the public temper has shifted to the point where Dwight Green, the former assistant United States District Attorney who sent Al to jail, can make a serious bid for election as mayor on the Republican ticket and a "Rid Us of Rackets" platform.

The tinsel about Capone has turned twardy, too.

He was taken to Alcatraz from the Atlanta penitentiary for fear his gang would free him. He made the trip west chained to a seat in a railroad car.

He was, indeed, a bold bad man.

He entered Alcatraz as one of the original "tough guys" in the "tough guys" prison. He engaged in at least one fight behind the walls, and was sent at least once to solitary.

But soon the bold bad man became a model prisoner. The hater of law refused to take part in a prison break plot. The foe of society subscribed to a magazine devoted to social progress, The Survey Graphic." And now his "master mind" has fallen prey to the decay science knows as paresis.

As long as he remains on "The Rock" something of the Capone legend will persist from the forbidden.

of the Capone legend will persist from the forbidden nature of the place. But when he leaves on January 19 for whatever lesser jail the government decrees for the year he has still to serve (which one it will be will be secret until after the transfer is made) he will be no criminal kingpin, but a broken man. So thin a shell of his onetime dangerous self remains that the man who directed Al's incarceration on "The Rock" four years ago says today:

"The best thing to do is to ignore him."
To be ignored would be a new experience for Al. He was in the limelight of the underworld from Al. He was in the limelight of the underworld from the time he came of age. He had just turned 22—approximately 22, that is, for no one knows the exact date of his birth in old-world Naples—when Johnny Torrio took him from New York to Chicago in 1919 to be the bodyguard of "Big Jim" Colosimo.

Torrio was a gangster pal of "Lefty Louie" and "Gyp. The Blood" who with others were bired by

"Gyp The Blood," who with others were hired by Police Lieutenant Charles Becker in 1912 to slay the gambler, Herman Rosenthal, in New York city. Colosimo was a street sweeper who pulled himself up by his political bootstraps to a place of power in the night life of the "Turbulent Twenties" on Chicago's south side.

Torrio seized control of Colosimo's realm after that booze baron was shot to death at the bar of his cafe. Capone became Torrio's aide, and Torria Al's tutor in the fine art of racketeering.

Torrio organized vice and crime into a $100,000 a week business, enforcing his rule with bullets. But he engineered his own downfall in the murder of a rival, Dion O'Banion. O'Banion's followers shot him in retaliation, and Torrio fled to save what was left of his skin.

That brought Capone to power in 1925. He was only 28, but already old in the profession. His apprentice mark was a scar on his left cheek. From it came the nickname he hated—"Scarfare Al."

Capone introduced the machine gun and extended racket rule to gambling, dog racing and politics.

To maintain this $100,000,000 syndicate, he

Al Capone and his ballwick, Chicago, during the period, 1925-1930.

waged constant war on the O'Banions, the O'Donnells, the Gennas and the Saltis' until competition from those mobs was stifled.

It was a bloody business. THE GANG, 1925-1930.

There were some 250 gang deaths in Capone territory between 1925 and 1930, and every one was blamed by the police on "Capone allies" or "Capone

The Vendetta legend grew to such proportions that it included more victims than any one man or gang of men could have done away with in the

As Al once put it:

"They've blamed everything on me but the Chicago fire."

Although a new death was laid at his door by public repute almost daily, he was legally charged with killing only twice. In those two cases, he went free.

The first was the shooting of old Joe Howard, a derelict hijacker, who told police before he died that "Young Al" had done him in.

The second was the assassination of William H.
McSwiggin, assistant state's attorney in Cook county

(Chicago) and two companions who happened to be beer running rivals of Al's hoodlums.

In the latter case, Capone is supposed to have been confronted by McSwiggin's old father, a police officer, and accused of the son's death. Al's storied reply was to hand the father Al's gun with the admonition.

"If you think I did it, kill me."

Al was not so willing to trust his life to others on other occasions. He appeared in the streets only in a reinforced steel car with bullet-proof windows. He is even believed to have had himself arrested, on a pistol toting charge, in Philadelphia and submitted to a year in jail there to escape death at the hands of rival bootleg bosses. He had been in conference with these rivals in Atlantic City, and they had failed to agree on a plan for peaceful division of territory.

In spite of his precautions, Capone was unable to remove himself far from the hail of lead which constantly whistled around him.

His closest call probably came as he sat at a table in a hotel in one of the Chicago suburbs which

Eight automobiles went by, spitting fire in his direction. When they were gone, 1,000 bullet holes were counted in the walls.

Al was safe, under the table The most inhuman slaughter he was accused of was the St. Valentine's Day Massacre of 1927. Seven members of the O'Banion mob were lined up in a Chicago garage and mowed down with machine guns.

Al, in jail in Philadelphia, denied any connection with the affair. But the Philly police took no chances. They hustled Capone out of jail a few hours ahead of expiration of his sentence, and he was next seen surrounded by a heavy guard in his private-beach-rimmed 25-room villa at Palm Island, Florida.

He liked it there, he said, because—

"It is warm, but not too warm."

Despite his record, Capone expressed a distate for all the shooting. On one occasion he exclaimed:
"I don't want to die, shot in the street. There's business enough for all of us without killing each other like animals. I don't want to die in the

That phrase-"There's business enough for all of us"—was indicative of the way Al looked at his bootlegging. All he was doing, he contended, was supplying the popular demand and he was no more guilty than the patrons of his far-flung commerce. But he was caught in the toils, and he knew it.

"I've been in the liquor racket five years," he asserted near the end of his reign. "The last two trying to get out. Once you're in, there is no out."

Only the law he flouted could provide the "out."

Only the law he flouted could provide the "out."
Four times it tried to do so, twice for murder, once for election fraud and once for conspiracy to violate the dry laws. Each failed. Then, at least, came the income tax evasion trial and Capone's conviction and sentence in 1931 to 11 years in jail.

Federal agents at that time estimated that Capone was worth $200,000,000 or more. He was so wish he could afford to squander $7,500,000 in eight rich he could afford to squander $7,500,000 in eight years of gambling, mostly shooting craps. Yet he went to jail for a small item of $215,080, the tax he failed to pay on a $1,038,654 income for the years

EN ROUTE TO ATLANTA PENITENTIARY.

Al rode to the Atlanta Penitentiary in the spring of 1932 on the same railroad he traveled in his palmy days from his Chicago beer baronetcy to his playground in Miami. He was pleased at the curious crowds which ringed his train at every stop, but annoyed at the ignominy of being handcuffed to a "small time" auto theft suspect.

A day's growth of beard offset the dapper effect

A day grown of beard offset the dapper effect of his rich blue suit, shiny black shoes, blue silk ties and pearl grey hat.

Of his own case, he muttered something about a "bum rap." He talked freely of other things—prohibition.

hibition, corn likker, dogs and the then unsolved Lindbergh kidnaping.

Behind the bars, he became a subject of speculation. He was buying special favors, rumor said. The rumor grew until it reached the floor of congress. The Atlanta warden replied that Capone was only No. 40,886 to him, and was a normal prisoner in every respect except that his visiting privileges had been curtailed, due to fear of a jail-

Inside the "pen," Al could spend no more than $10 a month at the commissary. Outside, he spent a small fortune on a battery of attorneys, trying to win freedom through the statute of limitations. But it could not be done, and the scar-faced one had almost dropped from the public consciousness by August 18, 1934.

ESCAPE PLOT DISCOVERED.

That night a special iron-barred railroad car slipped secretly into a siding at the prison. An escape plot had been discovered. In the dark of the next midnight Capone and 52 other dangerous or incorrigible prisoners were hurried on their way to the newly finished American "Devil's Island" in San Francisco Bay.
At their destination, they remained in manacles

while the car was moved onto a waiting barge. A coast guard cutter, guns ready, hovered near as the barge moved to the Alcatraz dock.

Since that day Capone has been completely shut off from his "public and applause."
He has achieved a reputation as model prisoner, but he has been involved in several brawls, one of which, officially confirmed, gave him one more scar, this time on his back.

That happened on a June day in 1936. James C. Lucas, Texas bank robber, seized a pair of scissors from the prison barber shop and plunged one blade into Al's back. Capone turned and sent Lucas reeling with a blow of his first, then was led away to the hospital.

Roy Gardner, mail robber released in 1938, related that he had a fight with Capone. He said it followed one of Capone's "Hell Nights"—sleepless nights of prisoners. As they lined up for breakfast, Gardner said, he stood next to Capone.

"What's the matter, Al?" Gardner said he asked. "'Can't you take it?'

"He peered at me through blood-shot eyes and let go a haymaker at my chin. I saw a guard point-ing his rifle at us from a guard tower, dragged Capone under the tower and we finished the fight." Formal confirmation of that combat is not to be had. But a prison official said Capone was placed in solitary confinement for four days because of sistic encounter.

Unofficial accounts of an uprising at Alcatraz be January, 1936, said leaders of the mutiny brander Capone a "yellow rat" because he refused to join

As far as his criminal colleagues were concerned, then, the "tough guy" was no longer so tough. The legend of the great gangster, the brave bad man, was riddled in the eyes of those to whom it meant

Instead of the desperate moves these cronies had hoped for, Capone made his conduct exemplary. He hoped, in vain, to thus win parole when he became eligible for it in 1935. But he did succeed in having three years lopped off his 10-year federal sentence for good behavior. Only a year in jail on a misdemeanor count and payment of $50,000 in fines and court costs remained before him after his scheduled release from Alcatraz on January 19.

Then came the final blow, the disclosure that Capone is suffering from paresis—decay of the brain tissues—and consequently was deranged to a "dangerous" extent one week in each four.

The legend, like a will-of-the-wisp, was flicker-

Advantages!

By CAROLYN McKENZIE.

Georgia may truly be the forthcoming garden spot of the world. It already possesses outstanding advantages and possibilities; a greater agricultural, hydro-electric power, forestry, and paper making section; a health center recently recommended by an eastern heart specialist. There is an opportunity in Georgia for further development of an inviting economic and health district.

Is Georgia developing her resources to the utmost? Dr. E. S. Sell, head of the geography department of the University of Georgia, stated recently, "The natural resources and climatic conditions in Georiga are generally favorable for a greater economic development than is being realized."

Professor Sell has edited a physical-political map of Georgia that is already being used extensively in schools of the state. He has recently written a manual that will be distributed with the map when it is off press in a few days. A bulletin from the company, for which Dr. Sell edited this Georgia

"This new wall map of Georgia is the most upto-date and accurate Georgia state map, both geographically and pedagogically, now available for the teaching of modern geography in Georgia class rooms. It presents a clear, memorable picture of the major physical-political features of the state in such a manner that relationships between human activities and natural environment can be demonstrated easily and understandably.'

Fertile soil, water power, and forests, developed by adequate rainfall, mild climate, and a long growing season, make Georgia a garden spot-a center to be developed into a manufacturing, agricultural, and hydro-electric power leader, along with an outstanding state in the naval stores in-

Let us look at the soil. First of all, the state is divided into four specific natural divisions. The general characteristics of the soil are based upon these natural divisions. Each of these areas may be subdivided into soil types based on the proportions of gravel, sand, salt, and clay that it contains.

In south Georgia there is the Coastal Plain Region which remained when the water receded and formed new land. The soil in this section was once the bottom of the ocean (60 million years ago). The second factor is that the soil was formed by water transported from the Piedmont belt

The soil of the Piedmont belt was made from nooks broken by weathering. The hill country of this section, coupled with the heavy rainfall, causes erosion. In order to prevent erosion, terraces and forests are necessary. The heavy rainfall is a great factor in erosion. In the Piedmont belt there is an annual rainfall of 50 inches. Since one inch of rainfall makes 113 tons of water to the acre, the amount that each acre in this section receives is enormous.

Valley soil washed down from the mountain side formed the most fertile part of the mountain region section. The difficulty found in attempting to grow crops on the mountain sides is caused by the major problem of soil erosion.

The great valley region (around Rome) was under water 150 to 200 million years ago; therefore, the soil is of a limestone origin. With limestone as the foundation of the soil, the section produces fertile crops.

A major crop in the state is cotton. Problems related to extensive cotton-growing are farm tenancy, soil erosion, illiteracy, a stabilized farm income. Attention in the Piedmont belt is being directed toward the problem of soil erosion. Farmers are planting winter legumes more and more, and in this manner are solving the problem in a large measure. In winter the soil in the section undergoes periods of freezing, thawing, breaking; but the mild climate, long growing period, and adequate rainfall cause the soil to become enriched and a solution to the problem comes closer in sight.

MANUFACTURING IN GEORGIA

Manufacturing in Georgia is an industry of promising prospects and increased capital, During one year, workers in factories totaled 143,115. They created $196,000,000 by the manufacturing process. During the same year the crops in the state were worth about $182,000,000. Does this mean that crops were not developed to their fullest-does it mean that manufacturing was the center of concentration

-or does it mean that there is still a vast deficit in

The fall line, which to hydro-electric power enthusiasts means large capital at small investments, is a factor of historic as well as economic and geographic interest. Imagine Augusta, Macon and Columbus as the coast line cities on the Atlantic ocean -the Key Wests of yesteryears (several score million years ago).

Dr. Sell's new manual, which will be distributed in a few days, states:

"The abrupt break in the topography at the fall line is very favorable for development of cheap water power. The dam is generally built just above the fall line and the pipes lead the water to the turbines below the fall line. In this manner the horsepower is greater than would be produced under usual conditions. Some of the state's largest textile centers are located on the fall line because of this desirable location for power from this source.

"The fall line will no doubt aid in bringing about a better balance between agriculture and industry in this section of the country," said Dr. Sell. 1936 the value of waterpower in Georgia was $12,910,260; the value of minerals was $12,791,-688. One-fifth of the potential waterpower is developed. Could the state and ingenous citizens of the state develop the other four-fifths?

GEOGRAPHIC FACTORS OF WATERPOWER.

The four geographic factors which determine the amount of potential water power in Georgia are annual rainfall, the monthly distribution of rain, the topography of the region, the fall line.

For 44 years Clayton has kept a record of rainfall March is the rainiest month; November is the driest. Clayton has an average annual rainfall of 70 inches. It is the center of the heaviest rainfall the state. The driest center of the state is Waynesboro, which has an annual rainfall of 44

Georgia's rainfall (44 inches to 70 inches) is quite adequate, according to Dr. Sell. The north-eastern part of the state is the second rainest part of the United States.

Georgia produces one-half of the resin and tur-pentine in the United States. Savannah ships more naval stores than any other city in the world. In the coastal plains long-leaf pines and slash pines for pulp mills grow in abundance. Oaks, hickories and long-leaf pines are the leading trees in Piedmont belt. The mountain region leads in oaks. hickories, spruce and white pines. So, one would conclude that the timber of the state is well developed. However, is there a greater economic development than is being realized?

Did you know that Athens was recommended by an eastern heart specialist as a city with climate and elevation suitable to improvement of heart disease? A continental climate with a marine influence makes the climate mild and conducive to successful agriculture.

The mean January and July temperature of Atlanta and Kansas City will illustrate the effect of the marine influence of the climate in Georgia: Atlanta: January, 43.1 F.; July, 78.2 F.; elevation, 1,050 feet; latitude, 34 N.

Kansas City: January, 30 F.; July, 78 F.; elevation, 963 feet; latitude, 39 N. The mean July temperature in the two cities is approximately the same, but the daily range of temperature in Kansas City is so much greater that the intensity of the heat in Kansas City is much greater. In north Georgia the growing season is about 200 days, while in south Georgia there are about days in the growing season. In many of the northern states the season is about 90 days long. So, the questions arise: Do southern farmers realize their advantages? Do they plan and utilize their

Bias Bay, Proposed Japanese Gateway to Canton

Famous for many years as a pirate's lair, Bias bay recently became the proposed military gateway to Canton of the Japanese army when 40,000 troops landed on its shores, headed for the metropolis of South China, 75 miles inland.

"Bias bay is one of the larger indentations along the irregular China coastline, near Hongkong," says a bulletin from the Washington (D. C.) headquarters of the National Geographic Society. just 35 miles northeast of the British Crown Colony.

Flecked With Islands.

"The entrance from the China sea is only about eight miles across, but inside the bay spreads out and numerous smaller indentations give it an overall extent of 17 miles from southwest to northeast. Because the bay is generously flecked with islands and partially submerged rocks, navigation over a large part of it is dangerous.

"About 10,000 people live on the shore and on the islands of the bay. Outwardly, in the days when pirating was their chief occupation, they were mostly peaceful farmers but agriculture merely was a mask for more sinister activities. They were always ready to loot a passing ship and land its booty on the shores to be disposed of through numerous 'fences.'

'The pirates usually stopped passing sailing ships by stretching a cable between two junks; then, as the rope was caught by the victim's bows, the junks could be swung alongside, so that the boarding of a vessel was an easy matter.

"With the coming of steamships, the technique of piracy had to be changed to boarding the steamers as passengers and, at the right moment, taking ers as passengers and, at the right moment, taking possession, then forcing the officers to sail the ships into Bias bay for looting. When riding a Chinese coastal steamer today, one is comparatively safe from these piratical attacks, but he has the feeling of being aboard a floating jail or prison ship, because the first-class quarters and the bridge still are usually separated from the rest of the ship by heavy iron grills, and all the ship's officers are armed like policemen.

Thrilling tales are told of pirate raids on coastal shipping, featured by unusual bravery, against heavy odds. Officers sometimes used deepsea leads and other ready weapons in pacifying pirates, and British judges at Hongkong and Shanghai dealt quick justice to captured outlaws. Death has been the penalty for many of the cutthroat leaders,"

KENTUCKIANS ARE DIFFERENT"

By RALPH McGILL.

Marmaduke B. Morton-

You had a sort of an affection for him even when you were a cub and he gave you the back side of his hand, as the Irish say. Later on you came to have a deep and lasting affection and respect for him

He kept a pistol in the top drawer of his desk, loose, coarse pipe tobacco and six or seven corncob pipes in the second drawer, and important papers in the third.

This was when he was managing editor of The Nashville Banner and when there were newspaper feuds which threatened, any day, to finish up with pistol shots. The tobacco was strong enough to carry an election

That tobacco alone would have killed an ordinary man. But M. B. Morton wasn't, and isn't, an ordinary man. He smoked constantly and inhaled.

Then, when he was 75, a taxi struck him and he was picked up on the street. It was raining and the water from the gutter was running into his face and blood trickled from the great wound on his head and from wounds on his legs. Both bones in his right wrist were broken, the left leg from knee to ankle had been crushed, and he was suffering from a severe concussion.

That, at 75 years of age, is enough to make an ordinary man give up. But he didn't. He stuck it out and after weary weeks in the hospital went home and now-at 80 years of age he has found time to write a book-

"Kentuckians Are Different."

For 50 years he was reporter and editor. He has put into his book of recollections the finest lot of reminiscences it is possible to find. There is quite a span in his life. He was, as a boy, a slave owner. The canvas of his memory runs from slavery times to the times of today. He dedicates his book to the fine old slave negroes "to whom the writer is largely indebted for the education he received in Nature's university." He spent a few years in Washington Territory 55 years ago, seeing the last real pioneer days of America.

He says, of the title of his book, that while he was born in Kentucky and lived there until 23 years of age, he never really knew Kentucky until he returned to Louisville and began work for the Courier Journal.

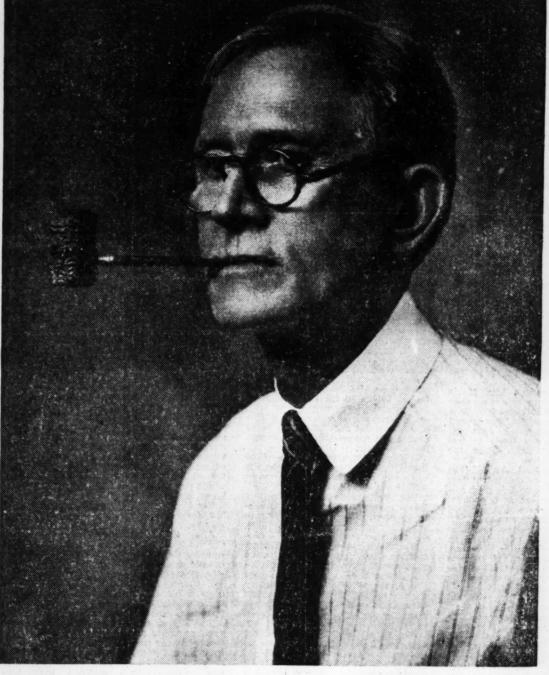

"Then, as a semi-stranger, I discovered that Kentuckians were not like other people, and that Kentucky hospitality was not a myth, though you found it expressed differently. Nowhere else . . . is your status as friend or foe so rapidly determined. And you must be one or the other. Also, Kentuckians frequently demand that you be a friend of their friends and a foe of their foes."

The stories are splendid reading. They have the right flavor, and they are a part of the growth of America. They are not, by any means, all newspaper stories. They are the whole life of the man, and are very splendid reading.

DICKENS' VISIT TO LOUISVILLE.

One of them deals with Charles Dickens' visit to Louisville. The "new Galt House" had been completed at a cost of $1,000,000. It was the finest hotel west of the Alleghenies. It had the first elevator in Louisville.

Dickens was brought to the hotel. One of the city's leading citizens, a Major Throgmorton, was owner of the hotel. After Dickens had been received and permitted to retire to his room long enough to have removed the stains of travel. Major Throgmorton, heading a delegation of the city's leading citizens, went to welcome him with an official welcome. They did not know that in England a hotel proprietor did not have such social standing.

Dickens, seeing the owner, cut them short, saying, "Landlord, when I need you I will send for

The proprietor made a rush for Dickens with the intention of throwing him out the window, but cooler heads prevailed.

Mr. Morton thinks the Louisville visit may have influenced Dickens' "American Notes."

which most assuredly will interest those who like good stories that come from court room, from newspaper offices, from the speeches of politicians and of statesmen.

I worked in The Banner shop for eight years with Mr. Morton. He had fundamental ideas, to which all editors today are returning after straying away for a while. He had staff meetings every day and every day each old-timer on the staff had to tell a story. Mr. Morton believed in "items," those small bits of news which make a paper more readable. He insisted that a birth and a death

One day Bill Hoffman, expert political writer, drew a sketch while Mr. Morton talked. It was a circus cage and in it, clutching to the bars, were men in high silk hats. The men had long teils and the cage was labeled, "Trained Undertakers." Jimmy Stahlman, then city editor and now the distinguished president of the N. P. A. A., snatched it up and showed it to Mr. Morton. Great was his disgust. He had great patience and impatience with drunks. He would assign reporters to take the offending brother home and the next day read him the riot act.

He had an objection to a dictionary being in the city room.

"If a reporter doesn't know how to spell a word he doesn't have any business using it," he said.

It is a sound argument.

sive hickory poles, 50 feet long, drawn by eight, 12 or 16 horses, and ridden by as many young Democrats as could get astride the emblematic log, waving flags and shouting 'Hurrah for Jackson.' "

The very "spirits" of this country were current with the growth of Jackson. Yankee Doodle and Uncle Sam were his contemporaries. When only 13 years old, Jackson put his gun into the Revolutionary War, at which time Yankee Doodle made his appearance from a scornful laugh.

A British officer at the beginning of the Revolutionary War laughed at a New England farmer wearing a feather in his cap and riding into town on his awkward plowhorse-he called the farmer "Yankee Doodle"-the first of the great Americans who "went to town!" After beating the British, the Americans were now proud not only to claim Yankee Doodle, but to have Europeans call all Americans Yankees.

While Yankee Doodle was gaining an unique fame in song and story that spread from Maine to Georgia by 1800, Jackson had gone to congress, "his hair done up in a queue with an eel-skin," and resigned to return to Tennessee, justice of the supreme court of the state.

Had the rhyme about Yankee Doodle been less jiggy and comical, it might have taken the place of "The Star-Spangled Banner." But Yankee Doodle was always "cutting up capers high as a cat's back" and the undignified figure began to lose his appeal to a triumphant people, now conscious of their importance.

In the War of 1812, when Jackson was rising as a military hero, Uncle Sam came into being. He is a familiar figure with his red-and-white striped trousers, his blue coat, white bell-shaped hat, hoary chin-whiskers and shaggy hair which certainly was a style of dress that might have been worn between 1813 and 1854.

"Uncle Sam and John Bull" were contrasted in an editorial in the Columbia Sentinel of December, 1814. Now Uncle Sam's position was secure and he possessed the admirable traits of Yankee Doodle. Authorities agree that the first cartooned figure entitled "Uncle Sam" was not published until January, 1852, in The New York Lantern.

By then, Jackson had been in the White House, nis colorful career ended returned to th mitage and had been resting in his grave in the garden for seven years

The spirit of Yankee Doodle and Uncle Sam continue. The Donkey and the Elephant are with us today. The party planks are strong and sturdy. And the great spirit of Jackson the Democratic warrior who could remember a fighting companion, lives on!

THINKING IT OVER

By LEONORA RAINES.

When I lived away from America, always I had a sneaking conviction in whatever country I happened to be, that that country was inexperienced, asleep or just awakening. The people seemed so impractical, so innocent, so unenlightened as to how the universe was joggling along. I felt that the United States was seasoned, middle-aged, a sort of mother to them all. Each power seemed to look to her to solve their riddles, to take their side against enemies. They expected America to give them aid and security at whatever sacrifice that might entail on her part. Of recent years, Europeans almost demanded that the United States buckle down and put her willing shoulder to help carry their individual burdens.

During the Great War America was made a reservoir for all calls. We sent volunteers helpers and supplies. We sent our boys to help them win victory. They accepted all that and later took our money for rehabilitation purposes. For a century Europe has not been able to take care of her nationals, or anyway she has been sending Uncle Sam her surplus population, her driftwood, her homeless, her soldiers of fortune. She has made a haven, an asylum, a convict camp of the United States, probably believing that in the great melting pot that is America, foreign commitments might be

In India, natives were like a horde of pitiful, unlearned, unwashed children, almost begging for some big power to snatch them out of Hinduism and squalor. In Japan and China, the "children" were younger and more helpless still. China with her dread of foreigners, her cry to be left alone and hug her rags in peace. Japan ambitious to be world leader and pacifier, yet not in the least knowing how. All this in the end, made me feel that America, having worked out her individual problems unaided, was more experienced in management and in carrying on, than the

Those people over there look upon the United States as a fantastic land of opportunity. They have absorbed the wisdom of the Sphinx and monstrate that, by minding their own business, by putting their interests above that of any other land. They let their neighbor look out for himself, in the meantime, keeping a close watch on all his movements.

By ELLEN ST. JOHN BARNWELL.

Andrew Jackson, seventh President of the United States, who helped carve a nation with his sword, did not forget his fighting companions. Even in the last year of his life when the young grand daughter of a war friend wrote him asking if he remembered, Jackson replied with a letter, the graciousness of which would surprise those historians who call him unlettered, illiterate and uncouth.

This letter, in his own handwriting, written in 1844 from the Hermitage, has come down through the family to the writer, from her great-grandmother. For the first time, this letter is published. Perhaps it will throw new light on the man historians delight in recording as "He never learned to speak or write correct English. An enemy once said, 'His letters with their crudities in spelling and grammar would make the better educated angels weep."

Known as the President who "kept his bark on," this tender letter written despite "debility" at 77 years old, shows that glorious trait-indigenous to the character of great men-that extra kindness. Out of all the letters the popular President received this inquisitive one of a young lady, Miss Ellen Frances Gaines, of Mobile, Alabama, later Ellen St. John, need never have been noticed-could have gone unanswered to this day!

But he recalled Lemuel Henry, a kinsman of ("Give-me-liberty-or-give-me-death") Patrick Henry. Lemuel did not make the pages of history, but he did the memory of Jackson, with whom he fought in the War of 1812 and died the following year.

Traveling down from Virginia, Lemuel Henry had settled in Alabama. There he saw the suffering from the Redman's savagery and on many occasions barely escaped with his life. The family of Lemuel rejoiced with the rest of the nation in 1815 when there came the decisive stroke of Jackson at New Orleans, January 8th. Today is the 124th anniversary of Jackson's successful crusade that marked the break of the Indian power in the southwest and removed the control of the Mississippi river from foreign influence.

Andrew Jackson, on the frontier of Patriotism, gave us not only political background, but the symbols. The donkey for the first time was run on the political scene by Andrew Jackson, who sat astride him in an etched cartoon of March 4, 1833, entitled "Race Over Uncle Sam's Course." Clay is shown on a horse a short distance ahead of Jackson's donkey, which is stumbling over a rock marked "Bank U. S."

Van Buren, depicted as a monkey, sits backward behind Jackson and holds on to the donkey's tail. Jackson spurs his steed with a hickory club-the first of the "big sticks"-called "Veto."

As Jackson really won that race, the donkey stayed by him and many cartoons thereafter interpreted the donkey having Jackson's head or face: for instance. Straightshanks' drawing, "I take the Responsibility."

The donkey was definitely given the Democrats by Cartoonist Thomas Nast soon after the War Between the States. Nast's pen also established the elephant as the Republicans' pet. Using these emblems for over three-quarters of a century, the

Villain of "Westerns" Visits Atlanta

By LARSTON FARRAR.

The knack of shooting blank pistols, letting movie stars beat you up and looking ferociously into a camera are as essential in Hollywood as the ability to act well and photograph handsomely.

In fact, there's money to be made in Hollywood just by fighting-and getting licked-and by shooting blank cartridges at a hard-riding cow-puncher, plus the ability to look cruel on occasions. These facts come straight from Tex Hall, 29-year-old ac-

Mr. Hall came to Atlanta the other day for a visit on film row. He spent some time explaining about his fights in Hollywood, too. All the fights, he explained, took place on film lots, not in night clubs. And all the shooting was with blanks, in the open.

"Principal thing a villain in pictures of cowboy life must learn to do," he explained, "is to take a good beating and protect the star of the film at the same time. We really fight, but we have to watch out for the big man's profile.

JUSTICE AND LADY BOUNTIFUL

Coster-Musica Masquerade Recalls Cassie Chadwick's Amazing Career

By PETER LEVINS.

When the fantastic Coster-Musica story broke recently, the immediate reaction was that here was something the like of which had never happened before. Philip Musica, a swindler and convict of many years ago, had, as a New York Times editorial put it, "achieved what in the f pure art would have called a magnificent act of creation.'

This genius had escaped from his identity, manipulated himself into big business, and then behind the cloak of respectability had continued his criminal operations, the ramifi-cations of which have shaken the

To a certain extent, it has been done before. Cassie Chadwick did it. Today we give you Cassie, perhaps the most extraordinary female swindler in American history. She may have been no business genius, she certainly made suckers out of an awful lot of supposedly smart males.

The future Duchess of Diamonds, as a respectful prosecutor later called her, was born plain Elizabeth Bigley in 1857, the fifth child of Mary Ann and Daniel Bigley. The father was a section boss for the Great Western Railroad, residing near Woodstock,

As a young girl Betty was bright but not popular. Slightly deaf, she spoke with a lisp, had brilliant dark eyes, thin, determined features, and a terrific passion for clothes and trinkets. She loved to spend money. In her teens she had a fondness for displaying cards inscribed, "Miss Bigley, heiress to $15,000."

SHE'D BEEN NEEDING SOME CLOTHES

Her first brush with the police happened when she was 21. Fur-clad, she marched into a barber shop at Brantford and requested, first, a man's haircut, then a false mustache. Then, when she tried to raise $20 on her papa's watch, police detained her until papa arrived. Betty already had her answers.

The doctor, she said, had ordered her hair cut off to relieve a headache. The mustache, she said, was for her brother. What about the for her brother. What about the watch? Well, she'd been needing

Soon after the family moved to Woodstock, Daughter Betty went on her first spending spree—the first of many in her long career. Purchasing a lot of stuff in a local store, she paid with a $250 note, which was accepted without question. (The first of many, many notes in her lifetime.)

Then she ordered a reed organ which she paid for with a note signed "E. G. Thomas." When this came due she offered a third—this was to be her favorite technique throughout the future-and then came trouble. was hailed into court and charged

But she looked young and fresh and awfully appealing. So she was acquitted March 21, 1879.

Betty now decided that she had outgrown Woodstock. She went to live with a sister, Mrs. Alice York, in Cleveland, Ohio, started making dresses, then opened a school for dress cutting. Some of her clothes were really luxurious, if not her own handiwork. She paid off with proceeds from a chattel mortgage on the

Within a year she met young Dr. Wallace S. Springsteen, and soon hatched a scheme which was typical of later big-time operations. In a manner at which she was very clever she let it be known that she was merely visiting Cleveland, that she in fact, an heiress from Ireland. Springsteen made her bride—and on their wedding night credit men seized Betty's trousseau, her furniture, as well as the wedding gifts supposedly sent by rich relatives Twelve days later the doctor sued for divorce.

Betty wrote friends that Mrs.

Springsteen (herself) had died, then she took a new series of names and traveled for a millinery house. Some-times she was Lydia Clingen, sometimes Lylie Clingen, sometimes Lylie Bagley — but always she was an heiress. Somehow she prospered

For instance, once a Mrs. Mazie Bagley became ill in Erie, Pa. (She had induced what appeared to be a hemorrhage by lacerating her gums. Sympathetic townspeople advanced handsome emergency funds to this obviously genteel lady. Then the

Traced to Cleveland, she received the citizens' bill and replied: "Poor Mazie is dead. A large concourse followed her to her grave. I thought you had heard. She was a splendid girl, but unfortunately weakminded. At 26 our adventuress became Alice Bestado, clairvoyant mistress of an expensive establishment in Cleveland Moneyed citizens, curious about their futures, consulted her. On the she ran a lending venture-and did a bit of borrowing herself.

In 1884 she contracted her second marriage, the lucky man being C. L. Hoover, many years her senior. In due time she bore him a son, Emil. What happened to Hoover is not known, and at 31 his wife or widow was back with her sister in Cleveland.
Presently Mrs. York had to leave a visit east. While she was gone Cassie-as she is best known in history-mortgaged all the furniture, then moved to a series of rooming houses, mortgaging their furniture as she went. Her sister had to settle many of her debts.

Cassie carried on. She moved to Toledo, where she transformed herself into Madame De Vere, clairvoy-She took on several young female seers in an elaborate house which drew a lucrative procession of upper-crust gentlemen. There were whispers that the assistants were not as spiritual as they seemed. Mme.

De Vere was accused of a hand in two society divorces.

The boss clairvoyant borrowed $1,000 from one Joseph Lamb, illpaid express messenger with five children. Then she began feeding Lamb notes to discount. When they had passed $40,000 worth, they were indicted for forgery. Lamb won an acquittal as a credulous dupe— Madame drew nine and a half years in the Ohio penitentiary.

Our future Duchess of Diamonds was now 33 years old. She was skinny and dour; she wore her hair severely pulled back on her neck. While her sister Alice cared for her son, Cassie continued her clairvoyance in prison—and did very nicely, for she was out in three years. The records showed that she had sought a full pardon. The pardon board was all for her "because the ge and prosecutor recommended

But Governor McKinley, for some reason, did not sign.

Loose again upon a most susceptible world, Cassie recuperated from her prison experience at the home of her sister, Mary, at Wood-stock. She patched up her differences the York home in Cleveland. Again clairvoyance beckoned. She set up as a fortune teller and mas-seuse, using the name Mrs. C. L. Hoover. Cassie was now 38 years old, with not a major scheme yet with her family and moved back to

One day an elderly physician, Dr Leroy S. Chadwick, called at her place. He had a bad leg, he which needed treatment. Cassie checked on him, learned that he belonged to one of the oldest families Cleveland, was a widower with an 11-year-old daughter, had a fine practice, social connections he never used and a splendid home on swank Euclid avenue,

Within a few months the one-time Betty Bigley, ex-convict, became the bride of Dr. Chadwick. That was in 1897, when she was 40.

The bride promptly arranged a lavish reception. She invited Cleveland's elect. Many came, curious to see the new Mrs. Chadwick. They did not come again.

Her pique turned her to spending, and her spending involved her in the most complicated financial legerde-She became for storekeepers one of the prize outlets for luxury trifles—at list price. And among Cleveland's wise (ahem!) moneyed men, she became known as a good

She issued an increasing volume of notes—i. e., written promises to pay loans within a certain period of time. She always paid, too, and with handsome bonuses. (Her very simple system was to pay off the old notes with new and bigger notes-but the wise men of Cleveland didn't quite get the idea.)

Two years after the wedding Dr. Chadwick gave up his practice and took his wife's son and his daughter, Mary, off to Europe. A sufferer from rheumatism, he sought health cures

This left Cassie free to carry on. And how she did carry on Once she phoned a department store to remain open after hours as she wished to do a bit of shopping.

Presently she sailed in and ordered $1,200 worth of handkerchiefs and 90 pairs of gloves.

Lots of times she did not bother to order individual pieces of jewelry—she would simply wave her hand and say, "I'll take this row and that row, and that row. And that tray. Another day she distributed eight grand pianos as gifts to acquaint-ances. She bought carloads of furs, favoring ermine. She gave her cook sealskin coat. She financed many a Cleveland girl's musical education.

TAKES DEBUTANTES ON JAUNT ABROAD

She took 12 debutantes off to Europe for three months, paying all the expenses of the jaunt. When the party returned, she went to a jeweler and ordered 12 miniatures, one for each girl. Then she said she wanted frames for the miniatures.
"What kind of frames?" asked the panting jeweler. do them in 18-karat gold," she replied, "and use your own good And who paid for all this? Who indeed!

Cassie naturally had to do a lot of business with bankers and money lenders. She traveled more—to Pittsburgh, to New York, later on long trips to Europe. Her husband and Mary came home on visits-Emil was being educated in the east.

One Christmas she invited Dr Chadwick to the theater. They dined afterward, then returned home to find the house redecorated-new furniture, new rugs, new pictures. "My Christmas present to you said Cassie happily. No one in Cleveland had any reason to doubt that Cassie was, in truth, rolling in wealth. Much of this conviction among the bankers grew of her cleverly planted story of having an independent fortune—money which she did not wish the doctor to know about.

Early in 1901 Cassie launched her most audacious get-rich-quick After the usual smart build-up, she took a Cleveland lawyer Andrew Carnegie's mansion at Fifth avenue and 91st street, New York city. She hinted to the lawyer that Carnegie would be anxious to dispatch his business with her quickly because—well, there were certain unfortunate, embarrassing details.

The lawyer remained out in their carriage while she disappeared into the house for her business with the immensely wealthy Iron Master. Cassie simply hid in the vestibule for a few minutes, then rejoined the lawver. She exhibited notes, all bearing

Carnegie's signature—or rather, his name—totaling more than $15,000,-000. One was a trust deed for $10,-246,000. The lawyer all but fell out of the carriage. What did it mean? What did it mean? Cassie now confided her great secret, which he was not to breathe to a soul. She was an illegitimate daughter of Andrew Carnegie? Needless to say, the talk got around Cleveland—and Cassie made good use of it to rebuild her credit. Several months after the Carnegie coup, she dropped into a Cleveland bank, had a talk with an official, and then de-posited her trust deed and notes. She made out a long list of securities which she said were in a package in her safety deposit box. She gave the banker a copy of the list.

THE BANKER SIGNS NAME TO LIST

A few days later she telephoned to say that she had misplaced her list of securities—would he be so kind as to send her a copy of his list?

The banker really did not want to do this. It was against his principles. But he hesistated against annoying such a magnificent customer—so he wrote out the list in his own handwriting, and signed his name to it. She gave a lot more pianos.

She gathered together a flock of inlaws and bundled them off to Europe. When a Chadwick niece married, she sent the bride a trunkful of sterling silver dishes. She had the plumbing pulled out of the Euclid avenue house and had gold-plated plumbing in-stalled. The bathtub was also gold-

Frequently she traveled in her own private car—the wealthy, wealthy Mrs. Chadwick of Cleveland. Lady Bountiful sure was having fun. Then, in November, 1904, Mr. Herbert P. Newton, of Brookline, Mass., sued Cassie for $190,800.

The civil action drew small public notice. Newton said he was suing for money loaned. He'd met Cassie in a business way the previous April and, knowing that she and her husband were wealthy, had made several large It was his understanding, Newton continued, that Mrs. Chadwick had a $5,000,000 fortune in the Wade Park Bank, Cleveland. The bank's secretary and treasurer, Iri Reynolds, was her trustee. She also had an income of $175,000 every six months, so of course everything was all right. However, he did want his money.

Then somebody called his attention to the striking physical similarity between the elegant Cassie and a sordid Cleveland clairvoyant who had served time in the Ohio pen. Newton laughed-the idea was ridiculous that they could be one and the same woman

Why, Mrs. Chadwick had shown him a note for $500,000, made out to her by "a gentleman whose signature is beyond question." And Reynolds, pointed out, had indorsed that Newspapers added a short bit from Toledo. Mme. De Vere had drawn a nine-and-a-half-year term. She would now be about 47. That was iust about Cassie's age.

The next day an unnamed New York lawyer volunteered that Mrs. Chadwick had recently contacted him in connection with a $200,000 loan. Another, O. A. Parker, said she had approached him a year earlier, "but I cannot say anything further."
It was remarked that the lady certainly shopped around for lawyers.

Meanwhile, Lady Bountiful sat pat

in her suite in New York's highly respectable and luxurious Holland House. She had a regularly employed masseuse, a French maid. a staff nurses. Former Assistant District At-Philip Carpenter had been engaged to look after her interests. On Monday, November 28, the Citizens' National Bank, Oberlin, Ill., closed its doors. It seemed a faraway happening. But other banks started popping in widely scattred localities as soon as word spread that Cassie had been a customer.

Mr. Reynolds in Cleveland added further disturbing news—he didn't know, he said, whose name was signed to any $500,000 note, and that he had no such note.

On Tuesday, November 29, the New York Herald printed pictures of Mrs. Chadwick and Mme. De Vere. They looked, indeed, remarkably alike. Then a tiny notice came through from Ontario—a Miss Bigley had posed as an heiress in her youth, had been acquitted of forgery, had married a Cleveland doctor.

Newton's attorney rushed to call on Cassie, now installed at the Park Avenue hotel. After a long conference, he emerged at midnight and cheerfully announced that he had her solemn promise to pay that $190,800 within 48 hours. "We are satisfied," he said, "with the ability of Mrs. Chadwick to meet her obligations

During the next day a "confidant" passed out the cryptic remark that, "Mrs. Chadwick states that Mr. Carnegie never had any connection with her affairs." This was the first mention of Carnegie in the case. A further mention followed fast.

In Franklin, Pa., James D. Chadwick, her husband's brother, related that Cassie had a wealthy uncle, father of an imbecile son, who, many years before, had left a fortune in trust for the boy. If the boy died, so Mr. Chadwick understood. She had also remarked to her brother-in-law that Charles M. Schwab had been helping her "several investments." (THE Cl M. Schwab, of course.)

A leading merchant of Franklin, James Woodburn, had something to contribute, too. Six years before, he said, Mrs. Chadwick had asked him to lend her $30,000, explaining that an uncle had left her $7,500,000, but that attorneys had demanded $30,000 to collect it.

She said that she would give a check signed by "one of the wealthiest men in New York." But the check was no good unless the estate were settled.

Franklin bankers had offered to let Cassie have $10,000, but she turned this down in a huff. On Wednesday, the 30th, it was reported that she had engaged a private car for her trip to Cleveland. She also wired a Cleveland news-paper that she would pay every dollar she owed, and that she regretted exceedingly "that so much groundless gossip has, without any fault of mine, caused so much trouble to others.

That same day the directors of the bank in Oberlin held a meeting to pray for "consolation and guidance. President Charles T. Beckwith, it was reported, was rapidly becoming a physical wreck. Cassie, he revealed had tapped the bank for $250,000, plus $100,000 of his own. That same day the Bank of Willoughby, Ohio, was saved from clos ing when four wealthy men, including H. C. Frick, of Pittsburgh, went to the rescue with satchels of cash. Still no one really knew yet wheth-er Cassie had worked a colossal swindle, or whether it was all just a scare. As one Oberlin stockholder put "This suspense is terrible!" On Friday, December 2, came the deadline for her payment to Newton-and Wall Street became aware that the lady was paying a visit. Crowds collected at noon outside the Trust building at 54 Wall Street. Word passed that a very rich man was "sponsoring" her ruptcy. She left the building via the roof,

19 stories up, and emerged down the elevator of an adjoining building. At 4 p. m. she ordered a drawing m car for herself and party on the 8:45 for Cleveland. At 7:30 she can-

"We are still waiting for the coin," George Ryall, attorney for Newton,

Cassie's western lawyer, Judge Albaugh, who had been reported on his way to Oberlin to make good everything she owed, now stated that his client was either an honest woman "or I am the worst duped man in America." (This came to be a sort of national banking anthem.) Mr. Reynolds, of Cleveland, drop-ped the next bomb. He disclosed that, three years before, he had signed an Beckwith tearfully confessed he had loaned all that money on faith in three notes signed with the magic name of Andrew Carnegie.

They totaled $1,250,000. One, indorsed by himself and Spear, had nduced Newton to part with $190,- BEDROS M. SHARIAN.

Prisoner of War 31,163. the Turkish Army of the West: Prisoner of War 31,163. Bedros' story is not alone of war. It is also a story of a life—of his recollections of 12 years in a Men-nonite orphanage in Hadjin, Cilicia, in Asia Minor, of the kindly teachings of American missionaries, and of his life as a student before war swept in to cast its evil spell over Europe. And then—war. "Prisoner of War" is based upon historic fact. Bedros served through the Dardanelles campaign and on desert duty on the Syria front before his capture by the British. He had served also through the Gallipoli campaign, and was in the thick of the fighting at the capture of Jerusalem Then, on the Mount of Olives, he fell prisoner. He tells vividly of his six months in a prison camp before being drafted into the British Intelligence Service. Later, under his erstwhile enemy, he aided in the action which routed the Turks from Syaia and Palestine.

It has been more than 18 years now since Bedros Sharian was mustered out, yet through Ernest Pye he has told a story as colorful today as were his experiences then. His story is a document well worth reading.

Post-War Epic. WOLF AMONG WOLVES. By Hans Fallada. G. P. Putna. New York. 724 pp. $3. P. Putnam's Sons,

After a successful first novel-"Little Man, What Now," Fallada seemed doomed to the field of authorship that never equals the literary strength revealed in the usually simple, but powerful, language of the first-born. His "Sparrow Farm." for instance, was splendid in concept yet woefully weak in execution and construction.
The author returns in "Wolf Among Wolves" to the scenes laid in his first novel and has produced a volume which for sheer strength has seldom been equalled. It is the story of despair and the search for security in the midst of chaos—the wreckage of Germany in the days following upon the trail of World War surrender and the crash of the monarchy. It is the picture of an era, in which men and women are but the puppets of a master pen in limning his greater portrait. The thin thread by which civilization hung has been captured in the lives of Petra, the castoff in the streets; in that of the Bailiff Meier who waxed rich in treachery and adversity, in the petty figures of a peo-ple with but common aim—the maintenance of life in the face of hope-

Great novels catch the picture of an era within the printed pages. It is what made "Gone With the Wind" It is the substance that has been caught again by Fallada in a story that will rank as one of the great novels of the post-war school.

In every war, atrocity stories are commonplace and difficult of sub-stantial proof. Many, if not the majority, are later disproved in the calm light of reason. However, in this case there can be no question of the authenticity of the factual data presented, and a large part of it has been admitted by Japanese authorities, particularly in the instance of the sack of Nanking. Little has been written about the history of West Virginia. For this reason "Recollections of War and Peace." by the late Anna Pierpont Siviter, will be welcomed by students of history. Mrs. Siviter was the daughter of Virginia's loyal war-time governor, Francis H. Pierpont, and has includ-ed in her "Recollections" a number of interesting bits which are definite contributions to the history of the period. In addition, the book is rich with war anecdotes and touching descriptions of childhood fancy. The author's facile manner of supplying all persons who agreed with her father with an air of faultless virtue while rendering all enemies into villains detracts somewhat from the early chapters of the book, but this criticism does not apply to the later chapters. On the whole, the material is presented very well, producing a rather painless method of acquiring a knowledge of some of the Unknown Territory. TEN YEARS UNDER THE EARTH, by Norbert Casteret. The Grey-stone Press, New York. 283 pp. Illustrated. $3.

We who live on the surface of the earth give little thought to what transpires and has transpired in the vast world beneath our feet—a story as filled with drama as is the exist-ence we know. Jules Verne's "Journey to the Center of the Earth" gave to the reading world an idea of what the great underworld holds, and it has remained for such speleologists as Norbert Casteret to tell in living words the true story.

It was Casteret, a Frenchman, who discovered by mere chance the cave statuary at Montespan, the oldest sculpture known to man. It was he also who discovered and explored the Gouffre Martel, 1,560 feet beneath the soil of his native France, and who as an anthropologist and speleologist has brought to light many other amazing things about the underground. Ten Years Under the Earth," profusely and beautifully illustrated, tells of Casteret's explorations in a manner easily understood by the average reader. He brings his own branch of science to the home in a form designed for easy understandability by the layman.

Incidentally, the two larger Atlanta newspapers are not men-

Running like a thread through the volume is the complaint that the press "deserted" President Roosevelt, and because of that cannot be termed liberal. This, it would appear, weakens his strictures, since agreement or disagreement with the President's policies is solely a matter of opinion, and one which cannot be pinned down except in the most rabid anti-New Deal newspapers. Certain it is that the vast majority of newspapers have praised those policies of the President which they felt worthy of applause and condemned when condemnation was felt due. In this they are no different from the vast ma-jority of the thinking public. There is, of course, the "lunatic fringe" of conservatism as well as the similar scattering of left-liberals.

THE ROMANCE OF HUMAN PROGRESS. By Arthur Stanley Riggs. Bobbs-Merrill Company, New York. 405 pp. $5. As man grows older and his appetite for knowledge becomes sharper, he experiences a growing desire for works which the layman's mind can easily and quickly assimilate. He hasn't the time for ponderous tomes on segregated sciences or other in-terests; the need for more compact knowledge becomes even more acute. Here is a story to fill that need-a story which, like Wells' "Outline of History," is certain to fare successfully in the best seller field of nonfiction. For here are eternities, brought down to 1938 in a form especially prepared for the man whose busy workaday life makes impossible prolonged study of progress through the centuries. "The Romance of Human Progress" is the romance of archaeology-a science whose increasing popularity intrigues rather than discourages the interest of the average man and woman of today. To use the author's "Here is own introductory words: the entire absorbing cosmic progress of man's ceaseless struggle from Eolithic times to the present, not only to lift himself above the brutes from among whom he emerged, erect, but constantly to surge upward—torch and fagot to candle, candle to oil, oil to gas, gas to electricity, and-perhaps not so very far ahead, either-electricity to radiant energy." Here archaeology is humanized, rather than put down word after word as a series of recorded diggings —and with a sly humor seldom if ever found in books of science, the author reveals that, after all, there is really nothing new under the sun. He employs archaeology to tell the companion stories of anthropology, ability to write a family story with a was well demonstrated in "The Evergreen Tree." This new story is built around the town of Stillriver, Wis., a town Mrs. Taber has previously used as the setting for her stories. Linda Ban-nister, her husband, Jerome, and their three children, are the family around which this story is built. While this is a family story it is better described as the story of the whole community or town of Stillriver. The problems of this family are so entwined with those of the community that it is more like a story of a town than of one family.

The plot concerns a strike in the paper mills and Gladys Taber brings home to the reader the results of such a struggle both to the owners of the mills and to the workers. Death and violence, caused by a striking mob of workers, and the results on the whole town is most vividly written of in this new novel where emotions are carried along at a fast rate. Gladys Taber has written five novels in the last five years. She has also published short stories in the leading magazines of this country and in England. JESSE R. PETTY.

An earnest and typically thorough German attempt at propaganda, plainly labelled as such, and addressed primarily for British consumption. It is a very uneven document, covering practically the entire range of German affairs. It includes thorough and scholarly discussions on economic and colonial problems by such men as Dr. Arthur Gutt, Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, and General Ritter von Epp; includes, alas, also very naive atmpts such as that by Frau Gertrud Scholtz-Klink on "The Place of Women in the New Germany." To those who seek statistics and material "The Place of facts the volume should be of abundant interest; sufficient experimentation in practically every field of hu-man endeavor has taken place in this New Germany to warrant thoroughgoing examination. Logical, But Debatable. THE UNITED STATES AND WORLD ORGANIZATION, 1920-1933. By Denna Frank Fleming. Columbia University Press, New York. 569 pp. Illust. $4.

A thorough exposition of the part played by the United States in international affairs during the postwar period. Dr. Fleming, who is associate professor of political science at Vanderbilt University, is a passionate advocate of United States participation in world affairs; feels that the "thumbs down on Geneva" policy is the greatest single mistake made since the war, looks upon every move to strengthen the League as abundantly justified (even up to and including the Draft Treaty), issues an ironclad indictment of "the little band of wilful men" who upset the domestic apple-cat of the League. A logical stand, but a debatable one, and somewhat disturbing in a work of this character. Withal this is a volume of thorough-going interest, clearly and forcefully written, abundantly documented. The text is accompanied by a complete picture gallery of world notables of the period. Heartily recommended to those who seek the roots of our present international troubles. OLE H. LEVAU.

Fishing for Better Lessons

His first catch! But the youngster in the top picture has made his mark in class. Otherwise, he wouldn't have been permitted to fish.

From school to fishing pond. This happy bunch noon on the banks with hook and rod.

In the minds of almost an even hundred pupils in a public school on top of Lookout mountain, their institution has made one of the most outstanding advancements that has been recorded in the history of education.

Not only do these boys and girls think so, but the principal of the school, Mrs. Floy P. Hillhouse, believes that she has made a remarkable discovery. So far as is known, this is the only public school in the country that maintains a fishpond on its campus, where the pupils are permitted to let their inherent fishing inclinations function normally with pedagogical sanction and assistance.

This unusual school is known as Fairyland, a name that might suggest other unusual surroundings and practices, besides that of regularly appointed fishing programs.

Fairyland school is situated on top of Lookout mountain, in Walker county, Georgia, less than a mile from the Tennessee state line. Lookout, which is a part of the Cumberland mountains, differs from the Great Smokies and the mountains in the west by being broad enough on top to support farming communities, a few villages and towns.

Fairyland gets it's name from a natural rock garden of 10 acres, which is separated from the school by only a few hundred yards of native mountain woodlands. When this exquisite nature spot was developed a few years ago and opened to the public, a small mountain town named Fairyland sprang up. Beautiful and expensive homes were made of stone, and gardens and swimming pools developed, including a clubhouse. The taxes that came from this new development were sufficient to provide a modern brick building for a school, where the native mountain children—might be educated.

It was by merest accident that an overflowing spring bubbled from the front school lawn, which ith a few strokes of the shovel and pick, caused the water to form a small fresh-water lake. Soon cattails, water lilies, pond cyperus, mosses and other plants peculiar to such damp situations, arrived by their own means of transportation, and settled down to make homes. Then followed the crooked-leg turtles, the bass-singing bullfrogs, the belted kingfishers, and a red-winged blackbird nested in the cattails each spring while the husband showered the school with his constant calls of onnies, water striders and whirings beetles to put a finishing touch to the small lake.

Soon after the small fresh-water lake came into existence, some modern Izaak Walton slipped catfish, perch and a few other fishes into it. Two years ago, the fish had prospered to such a stage that the boys made some secretive tests with rod and line from which dangled red worms, and they found the fishes were waiting ready and willing found the fishes were waiting, ready and willing

"Teacher, can I go a-fishing?" This question came thick and fast. Principal Hillhouse and her two assistants realized that they had a perpetual problem on hand. The principal took the task home with her, and held a private session with her own person. When she went back to school the next day she had evolved an idea.

"Every boy and girl who does his or her job this week satisfactorily will be permitted to fish on Friday afternoon," she announced.

No promise of gold or automobiles or dogs and horses could have been quite as alluring. The school children danced under the exciting news, and there were no idle moments between that day and Friday. When Friday afternoon came the pupils had done better work than they had ever accomplished in the history of the school By this time small slender saplings were cut, lines tied to their ends, sinkers and corks placed on each line and a strong hook to complete the equipment. Red worms, like the soil of Lookout mountain, and fish bait were no trouble to provide.

The rigging completed, a-fishing the school did go. Fortunately, the human instinct to fish is never satisfied. The yearning grows more intense the more or less the number of fishes are caught. No boy or girl ever grew tired of the sport, which has come a part of the school's curriculum.

Lookout mountain is about 90 miles long. It begins at Chattanooga, Tenn., passes through a sharp corner of Georgia, and then gives up at Gadsden, Ala. In Alabama the mountain is broad enough to support a beautiful river. There fishing has been an attractive sport for more than 100 years, but people living on the north end, where the streams are small, have not had this advantage because the water is not deep enough to support fish of catch-able sizes. Consequently, the principal of the school has to teach many of the boys and girls just how to bait a hook correctly to be a successful fisher. Although fishing has been an established part of the weekly program, Mrs. Hillhouse does not permit any boy or girl to venture out with hook and line without first bringing to her written per-mission from his or her parents. In places, the small lake is almost 10 feet deep, and although the native mountain children are well able to take care of themselves, to safeguard her from the consequences that might follow an accident, the parents must give their consent.

Besides the sport of fishing, the lake has proved an excellent laboratory for providing many speci-mens for the study of nature in the schoolroom. For example, one day in digging fir fish bait near the lake, a boy unearthed two turtle eggs. While the principal was holding these eggs in her hands, telling the story of this kind of reptile, one of the lit-tle turtles broke the shell and walked off, causing almost a panic of delightful excitement.

From the two years' experience in utilizing the fishpond as a perpetual stimulant for better prepared lessons and better deportment, Mrs. Hillhouse thinks that every pupil needs access to a small pond, well stocked with fish.

But they have baited teacher, with perfect deport-

Remarkable Transformations Are Made By Atlanta's Home-Aid Project

By ELIZABETH D. SMITH.

When the telephone rings in the office of Mrs. J. D. Miller at 160 Pryor street, it is usually a signal of distress, just as an SOS is a distress call at sea. For it literally means that some needy Atlanta family is facing an emergency and needs help just as fast as it may come. There may have been an accident, a sudden illness, the birth of a child, a family of small children deserted by their parents, or a death in a family. And the SOS is for a home-

These calls are investigated as quickly as possible by a field worker, and when justified, a girl in a neat, dark uniform will take her utility bag and hurry on the job.

There are some 40 white and 60 colored girls, employed on the home-aid project. Having been trained by a home economics teacher between hours on their jobs, in the instruction rooms at headquarters, they know how to cook, sew, care for children, do simple nursing, keep house and also how to make homes out of places. But even more, they know how to plan a budget that will cover the needs of a family on a WPA income.

"I think you've got something there!" is the usual exclamation of visitors to this department when they see in operation Atlanta's plan of giving employment to the needy in the homes of other needy, who are ill, blind, or otherwise incapacitated.

This organization is operated on a federal shoestring under the paternal sponsorship of the State Welfare Department, and for lack of a better name was dubbed "Housekeeper's Aid." Mrs. Miller, former state president of the Georgia Parent-Teacher Association, and one time head of a state institution for the deaf in Michigan, is supervisor. Mrs. Isabelle Prescott is the present teacher of home economics.

More than 2,000 families have been helped by this department in the one year of its existence, and prompt and sympathetic assistance, call her "Ma Miller," to her back, and address her with great respect, but no less affection, to her face. This is not surprising when one discovers how many white and colored children are wearing her made-over clothes, and how she sacrificed the small garments once worn by her own son, now a young man, so that an unprepared-for baby might have clothes.

But to see for oneself how this unique department operates, one takes the elevator to the fifth floor of the old Telephone building, where workers on the WPA are trained to help others on the WPA. Down a dark hall one comes suddenly into the cheerful atmosphere of Mrs. Miller's office, where at a huge square-topped desk she efficiently handles the SOS calls of the day. Her windows are bright with green plants growing gaily from scarletpainted jelly jars. And a supply of quick-growing things are here to be borrowed from in order to brighten the room of some invalid or permanent

Adjoining this office is a large instruction room, and branching off to the right are a storeroom and a one-room apartment, demonstrating how a home may be made out of a place. In many instances the homes where these girls work are so poor they plained, "the large kind which are sent to the state department. We used the same material for the bedspread and dressing table curtains. The wardrobe is homemade, the dressing table is made from a packing case, the mirror donated by a furniture store. The bed was a discarded one which we reclaimed and painted. The baby's bed is a cardboard box, lined with cotton batting and old sheets.

"Our girls who help take care of babies feel that a baby should have a bed of his own. Some of them have tried using bureau drawers, but a box is more practical. The family," she added, "might need the drawer.'

In the kitchen behind the screen, there was a neat cabinet made of orange crates, a substantial kitchen table constructed from packing cases, and a two-burner oil stove. Health posters decorated the walls, displaying brightly colored fruits and vegetables, so necessary in a balanced diet.

Back in the instruction room, a group of girls bent busily over their sewing. In the homes where they work this is an important part of their job, for there are usually children, often many of them, needing clothes. Some of the aides have donated their own outgrown clothing to children and then remade the garments for them, and it is the proud boast of this department that no child in the homes where the aides work, had to stay out of school in September for lack of clothes.

Mrs. Isabelle Prescott, present home economics teacher for this department, has worked out a very important feature of home-aid work. She has taught the girls not only food values, but how to buy and budget, thus when the girls go into the hundreds of homes of Atlanta's needy, they in turn aid the housewife in working out a budget on which her family may be adequately nourished on an infinitesimal income. Knowing how, when, where, and what to buy takes one a long way toward this desirable accomplishment.

After this visit to home-aid headquarters. Mrs. Miller suggested that it might be interesting to see the results of home-aid efforts. The tour of inspection carried us first to a home where two white aides were at work. Three women, old, ill and alone, had asked for help several days before. Since the work was so heavy the supervisor had sent two instead of the usual one girl, on the job. One of the women, a pneumonia patient, had died that morning. When we arrived the two girls, after calling the undertaker, had bathed and fed the other two patients, cleaned the room where the third had died, and were then completing the job of putting the house in order between visits to the patients'

"These girls are wonderful!" Mrs. Miller exclaimed, "in illness, birth or death, they carry on. Not one of the girls, either white or colored, has ever run out on a hard job."

In another section of town, a blind woman felt lack even the most necessary things for homemaking. In this event, the aides help the housewife to make or obtain what is needed. This apartment, created by the girls and supervisors, suggests what may be done in such a case.

The room has a simple attractiveness. It is divided into two parts by gay home-made screens, and one forgets about the kitchen while examining the bedroom. Smart ecru curtains adorn the window, the hems finished in an interesting design of contrasting color. And the same motif is carried out on the bedspread, and the curtains for the dressing table. The room is furnished with a reclaimed iron bed, home-made wardrobe, dressing table, whatnot, and a baby's bed made from a cardboard box.

Mrs. Lillian Morgan, who was that day in charge of home economics, acted as guide and explained how and of what each thing was made. "Our curtains are from oatmeal bags," she ex-

well as one of the most popular of our birds. We have him in this state all the year round.

In winter the bluebird frequents the more open country, rather than the deep woods, although it is found often in open woodlands and pine forests. It is usually seen in small flocks, and often is followed by smaller birds, sometimes several species together, tagging along behind, whenever the bluebirds fly I have seen field sparrows, chipping sparrows, goldfinches, juncos, pine warblers, and palm warblers follow them this way. I wonder what attraction they find in the company of the bluebirds?

A Boy Scout writes to me, wanting to know how to begin studying the birds. It is quite simple. Get out and look for them in their haunts in the open country. Use your eyes and ears, and stalk them carefully. You must learn their names first. Use a good book and learn the correct name from the beginning. Probably the best books for the beginner are Chester A. Reed's "Bird Guide," and "What Bird Is That?" by Frank M. Chapman. Roger T. Peterson's "A Field Guide to the Birds" will also be a great help. Other books may be found at the Other equipment for the beginner in bird study includes pencil and notebook, and a good field glass if one can be obtained. There are people who have learned much about birds without a glass. You will learn far more with one. Beware of buying a cheap glass, unless you know it is a real bargain. Many field glasses that seem to be wonderful in-struments are useless for bird study. It is best not to waste money on one unless you know that you are getting something you can use to good advan-We will include more about how to start studying birds in this column later on.

her way to the door to admit us. A home-aid girl was helping out until some relative could come to assist the blind housewife. The house was clean and in order and the girl was cheerfully preparing a meal. From here we went to another section where an aged man and his wife, both ill, were being cared for by two efficient home-aides.

The negro section was our next destination. House numbers here had fallen off and never been replaced, and I wondered how Mrs. Miller could find the homes we were to visit.

"That will be easy," she exclaimed, "the windows and curtains are always clean where our girls are working."

And it was true. Our car stopped as if in admiration, before a clean, scrubbed porch, reflected in shining windows, where curtains were thread-bare but fresh. The home-aide had used all her soap before finishing the cleaning, but undiscouraged by this fact, she had simply gone out and acquired enough sand to do the job.

Another home-aide sent out to care for an old woman who was ill and alone, gave the patient the usual care and then cleaned the house. But the results were so discouraging she told her troubles to a neighbor. Overcome with admiration of such energy, the neighbor promptly donated a supply of paint, and the girl on Mrs. Miller's arrival, had painted floors, woodwork and all the furniture. The patient, growing interested in the transformation of patient, growing interested in the transformable to her home, had grown better and was soon able to look after the place herself.

Georgia's drive this year on slum-bred and deficiency diseases is capably assisted by the homeaide work, for it gets down to the root of the trou-ble. By teaching cleanliness in the home, disease is prevented, and by planning adequate diets, the de-ficiency diseases are avoided, thus making or contributing toward better health for all of Atlanta. But the homes in which the girls are employed are not the only ones that benefit. The girls them-selves, and their own homes, are changed as a result of their training and work. Their training, put into practice in their own homes, results in a better standard of living and increased efficiency. Their vork gives them confidence, and the success of their efforts, a satisfying sense of accomplishment "Some of our aides have literally recreated homes," Mrs. Miller declared. "In cases where worthy people have become discouraged and dis-pirited over loss of their jobs and ill as a result, these girls have done wonders. By preparing nour-ishing and wholesome meals, improving the appear-ance of their homes, they have restored pride and confidence to their patients, and a normal outlook

The girls have done especially good work in homes where children have been deserted, or where the mother has died and left them unable to care for themselves," she continued. "In fact, they have done well in all the work assigned to them. But I feel that the aides themselves have benefited as much as any of the people they have assisted.

SOME WINTER BIRDS

The junco is one of the commonest of our winter birds. One is apt to find them almost anywhere in the open, but they prefer old fields and hillside thickets at the edge of the woods in which to spend most of their time. They travel together in little flocks, searching for weed seeds, their chief fare while they are with us. They are winter visitants only, leaving our part of the country for more northerly breeding grounds.

The Carolina junco, a subspecies which is almost impossible to distinguish from the common slatecolored junco, nests in the southern mountains, and has been found in our Georgia mountains in the summer. We have both forms about Atlanta in the

The junco is a neat little bird in appearance. It is quite pleasingly formed in trim, graceful contours. I like the shape of its head, set off with the pale pink bill and black, beady eyes. The male is a dark, immaculate gray with clean white below. The female wears modest brown, where her mate is gray. When the bird flies, the white feathers in the seeds it eats. It does not often come up close to our homes unless driven by snow to seek food there. For this reason it has been called the snowbird by many people.

with a jaunty air of superiority. We have him about Atlanta the year round. In winter a mockingbird often selects some clump of shrubbery with berry-bearing bushes for his own, and contests any other bird that comes to it, fighting for the berries that he intends to have for his wir food. He likes privet berries, and I try to keep some large bushes of this plant on my home grounds for a mocker to come to. I have banded my winter mockingbirds each year, and so I know that a different bird has been with me each time. I hope that I will hear from some of these birds, if they are found with their numbered bands. I would like to know where they went after they left me in the spring. I hope they are all still alive.

The mockingbird may be heard in song at almost any time of the year, but the winter singing is usually soft and whispered, and is given in short snatches, as if the bird were reminiscent of the joys of another season.

The red hills of the Georgia Piedmont, the white nds of the coastal plain, and the blue mountains of the highlands are all represented in the bluebird's plumage. He is one of the most beautiful as

Spitalny Girls Have Contract Not to Marry

Phil Spitalny's "Hour of Charm" girls can't marry. That is, they have a contract with Phil which requires them to give six months notice before taking on husbands. Phil took this precaution after having such a difficult time in assembling a girl orchestra and finding someone to sponsor it. For more than a year he traveled the United States holding auditions, seeking to find talent that would harmonize.

Finally he got together an orchestra with girls ranging in age. from 17 to 30 years of age, picking them from 12 stages. There are 32 girls in the band. This orchestra is said to be the only girl band on radio.

Spitalny was born in Odessa, Russia, 40 years ago. He came to the United States with his mother and older brother when only 15 and almost immediately after the family settled in Cleveland the musically inclined boy organized his first band. Later he directed the symphony orchestra in Boston.

Stuart Erwin learns that all girls aren't so sweet. Here he is caught between the fighting Misses Pauline Moore and Joan Woodbury in "Passport Husband," current screen attraction at the Roxy.

employed with many hands that are now being bid as takeout doubles. Easy to Recognize.

The jump overcall is the ideal bid to employ whenever defending bidder fears partner might pass his takeout double for penalties. Such a hand is easy to recognize. Defender holds a strong rebiddable single suit or a good two-suiter, with 3 to 3 1-2 honor tricks. It usually lacks the defensive qualities present in a takeout doubling hand.

As a rule, a jump overcall merely invites a mild raise from partner. It is only semi-forcing. The takeout double, on the other hand, is positively forcing, when third hand passes.

For example, North holds: S-A Q J 9 6 3, H-4, D-3, C-K Q

Bids Jump Overcall.

West opens the bidding with one heart. North with the above hand overcalls defensively two spades instead of doubling for a takeout.

Game in spades is possible, whereas North's hand is too unbalanced for defensive purposes in the event South, possibly holding: H-J x x x x x, decides to pass one heart, doubled, for penalties.

Likewise, North should prefer a jump overcall, holding:

S-A K Q 9 8 7 6, H-9, D-A Q 4, C-8 6.

Aggressive Type Hand.

Again the chances favor North-South playing the contract in spades and again North's hand is not very well suited to defend against hearts.

In either example partner raises North's two-spade jump overcall holding adequate trump support and about one honor trick; or holding a doubleton or singleton and three trumps.

Always prefer a jump overcall to a takeout double with a hand that will not stand a possible pass for penalties.

Questions, Answers On Garden Subjects By MRS. FLETCHER PEARSON CROWN

Aren't you glad that Christmas has passed, and we can again get back to our gardening? Whether the weather be good or whether it be bad, there is always something about gardening that can be done. So much of it should be done indoors; studying, planning, making out seed lists, rose lists, and bulbs, and lilies. This is the one time of the year when you can move things about or plant them for the first time. Please correct some of those mistakes which have been worrying you for several years.

If you were fortunate enough to receive any tulip, hyacinth or nar-cissus bulbs, get them properly planted now. If you have failed to plant sweet pea seed, you should plant them now. If you wish to move old roses or to add new ones I would do it now. If you have any shrubs to move to make places for some which are newer, more beautiful or more suitable, do so now. I like to get these things behind me as soon as possible. possible. I know that the weather is not ideal, nor the ground in the best possible condition, but if I wait for all this to happen at the same time I will never get my garden work done. We have very few weeks in the entire year when everything is Do the best you can under existing conditions.

I have been asked about pruning grapes. I have had very little experience with grape pruning, but I know that it should be done during the winter, in this section. As you know we do not prune grapes for landscape effects, but to make the vine bear fruit. Different varieties need different amounts of pruning; the scuppernong is usually given very little. Recently it has ben recommended to give it more pruning and

PLANTING PECANS-A SOUTHERN TREE

By W. ELBRIDGE FREEBORN.

The pecan is interesting for several definite reasons. It is a typically southern tree. It has two definite purposes in the section of Atlanta, and three purposes south of Atlanta. Successfully planted, it grows easily with a minimum of trouble and work. Also it is practically disease proof.

Pecans are native over a wide area that may be defined as the lowlands of the Mississippi river basin from Ohio and Indiana south. They have also been found in certain sections of southern Alabama. Roughly, it may be stated that pecans may be produced successfully and profitably, other factors being equal, in sections where cotton growing is carried on. It must be noted here, however, that pecans may be grown as far north of the cotton-growing section as shade trees. This is largely due to the pecans peculiar method of pollination-but more of that later.

In Atlanta the pecan has two practical purposes. It may be used as a shade tree, will brighten the life of every squirrel, little boy anl jaybird for blocks. These three animalswe feel at liberty to use this term to include the second one of these three, since we have moments of realization of our true character-like tall trees in which to play, and nuts to crack and eat. Fortunately, the pecan is a proud southerner with head held very high. To us gardeners this means that we can have grass under these beautiful shade trees without the trouble that comes from trees such as Magnolias.

The tree has a stately habit of growth, sometimes reaching a height of 75 feet. The growth is pyramidal and generally symmetrical

South of Atlanta it may be grown commercially in orchards. A great deal of space must be given pecans in the orchards if they are to grow at their best. The minimum distance between the trees should be 40 feet, while 50 or 60 feet will be better for the trees. Care should be taken in th selection of the field for pecans. They prefer a sandy loam with clay base. They are heavy feedersso for that reason cover crops, such as peas, velvet beans, crotalaria, etc., are used to advantage. They also show improvement if clean cultivation is followed.

Pecan growing should be entered ghtly. The selection of the prop-r fields, the prepartion of the land, lightly. the care of the orchards, all are expensive steps, and there are no short cuts. However, many tales are told—and many of them undoubtedly truthful—of small fortunes made from smaller fields by this magical

The question most often asked about pecans is the hardest to answer. "How many pounds of nuts can I grow per tree?" Obviously, this depends upon the variety, the soil, the care, the fertilization age and the growing season. But we can answer the question after a fashion by saying that many trees have a total of no pounds at the end of the season while some have borne 400 pounds in one season. Some-where between those extremes the correct answer lies.

Planting Directions.

Care must be taken in planting pecans. They are difficult to trans-plant, even in the case of the smalltrees and more difficult in the larger

Within the past few years a new method of handling in the nursery has been developed. After the trees are ready to be treated. The treatment consists of dipping the tree from the bud to the top in a warm paraffin mixture. This contains several products other than the paraffin, but this is the basis of the solution. This dipping results in a thin coating of this wax which seals every breathing pore in the top of the plant. This enables the tree to be transplanted from the nursery to your home or orchard without the moisture in the plant being given out at the top while no othmoisture can be taken up by the ree through the roots.

At the same time the roots must be carefully protected from the sun and from winds to keep the roots from drying out. This is usually done by packing the trees in damp sphag-

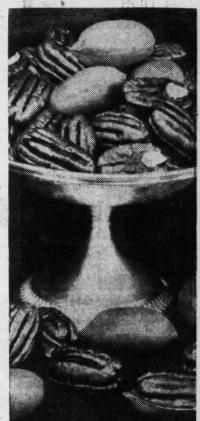

Before digging the holes for th pecans, measure the length of the tap root and the spread of the lateral roots. On a three-foot tree the tap root will be at least three feet long and the laterals probably 18 inches. Therefore the hole for the tree should be about four feet deep and three and one-half feet in di-

Question: Is it too late to remake my garden now? My husband says

Answer: I am afraid that your husband had his garden training much further north than you now live. I never stop doing garden work at any time during the winter, for more than two or three days. Of course, if it is raining I stay indoors and plan. If the thermometer is be-low 25, I usually stay in until the sun warms things up. But any garden work can be done now, with the knowledge that is all right.

The tree should be placed in the hole slightly deeper than it stood in the nursery. This means, in other words, that the bud should be slightly below the level of the ground.

In the spring after the tree has commenced to grow, give it a thor-ough fertilization with a high-grade commercial fertilizer, analyzing about 12-4-4. In the years following it may be fertlized in the usual manner at least twice during each growing
